TO THE DESCENDANTS NOW ON THE STAGE, AND THOSE COMING AFTER,
OF A WORTHY ANCESTRY TRACED IN THE SEVERAL LINES BEARING THE NAME OF CHILD, CHILDS AND CHILDE, THIS WORK IS RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED;
WITH THE EARNEST WISH AND CONFIDENT HOPE THAT THE RESULTS OF A PATIENT AND PERPLEXING SERVICE OF MORE THAN THREE YEARS, MAY MEET THE CORDIAL APPROVAL OF THOSE FOR WhOSE PLEASURE AND BENEFIT THE WORK HAS BEEN UNDERTAKEN.

'Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.'—Exodus xx. 13.
THE CHILD COAT OF ARMS
We would earnestly request all to read the Introduction (so termed) to this work, as opening the plan pursued in its arrangement. Selecting the Emigrant, the date of whose arrival in America in most definitely ascertained, as the pioneer in our Genealogy, we have traced his descendants as far as attainable to the present time. The next line is kindred to that first given, the emigration, also, supposed to be about the same time: and thus with each line the same order is observed in reference to arrangement. These differing lines are followed by some incomplete families now in the United States who have not as yet been able to find the clues to their early ancestry in America; and two ancestors and their descendants who have come to this country within the present century; the whole supplemented by some names not linked to any line, and some statistics pertaining to lines previously recorded, which came to hand too late to be placed in their due position. Such matter is so marked as to be easily placed where it belongs. There is another point we wish may early attract attention, namely, the articles on the "Origin and Etymology of the surname Child," and "Sketches and Incidents of English Families." That we may escape the charge of any purpose to force the use of a form in the name, which some discard, we wish it to be distinctly understood that our aim has been to write the name in all cases as desired by its bearer. Any failure has been unintentional. It has been exceedingly difficult to discriminate, when in the same family a part write the name with, and a part without the "s". Further on we think it is clearly shown that the name was originally written without the "s." We are aware that some feel indifferent, and others regret the use of the "s" as a terminal in their own case, and have requested that it be left off in the printing of their record. Others still are quite tenacious to have the "s", attached. We cannot but express the belief that when the article on the origin of the name, furnished by one who has devoted much time in its preparation, is carefully read, there will be a common feeling of regret that the "s" should ever have been added. Its use or omission will not vitally affect the identity of any one in this work. No very serious embarrassment will arise in tracing the lines. Our method of recording the different branches by generations in due chronological order, will generally render it easy for one to trace his or her line of ascent. In this place it is pertinent to emphasize the advantages of a well prepared Genealogy—one of which is that it preserves the identity of families and individuals, even with such changes in the spelling of the name, in any manner to please the fancy. The importance of preserving this identity is apparent in questions of legal titles to an estate, a point perhaps to which many have not given serious thought. A no less important consideration is that Genealogical records show how far we are indebted to our ancestors for our physical, mental and moral proclivities—an inheritance we cannot escape if we would. It is folly therefore to attempt to ignore our ancestry, as we are held by a law higher than ourselves. It is the dictate of wisdom to recognize the existence of relations which affect our destinies, and cherish what are beneficent, while we guard against those that are baneful in their tendencies. Much of the moral evil and physical suffering of this life might be avoided or remedied by giving heed to the laws of transmission. The medical man in the treatment of physical diseases has gained a point often when he has learned the antecedents of his patient. This law applies to mental and moral tendencies with equal force. Instead of alliances and associations fruitful of baneful results, more healthful ones could be inaugurated, bearing sweeter fruits, were not fundamental laws set aside.

EXPLANATIONS.

To the name of each individual is attached a number. This number will indicate that individual wherever found, proving an additional means of identification; necessary where names are so often repeated.

The following abbreviations have been used: b. for born; m. for married; d. for died; yg. for young; da. or dan. for daughter.

ERRATA.

Page 147. No. 28. —Read Ruth Curtis, not Ruth Ammidown, as found twice on this page; again No. 641.

Page 417. No. 641. —Read Dudley, not Daniel Chase. This marriage linked the family with the U. S. Senator Dudley Chase, Bishop Philander Chase, both brothers of Mercy Chase, who married Stephen Child No. 641, and a later generation, the late Chief Justice Salmon Chase who was a nephew of Mercy Chase Child. Ruth Child, No. 646, not Harris left one son Samuel M. Chase.

INTRODUCTION.

Not infrequently concurrent influences draw one into a line of activities unsought and unlooked for. By such a method I have been led to undertake the work of preparing a Genealogy of the Child, Childe or Childs family, and alliances by marriage, in the United States and the Canadas.

The name has been variously spelled in this country for years, taking on sometimes the terminal "e," but more often the terminal "s." For the first two generations in this country the name was written Child. Occasionally at an early period the terminal "e" was used. But later the "s" has been more frequently employed. Upon whatever principle the change may be explained, it seems unfortunate for the preservation of the integrity of the family, as the effect is sometimes to lead members of the same branch to lose sight of their kindred. We have aimed scrupulously to write the name in this volume as written by those who have furnished their record; deeming it our duty however, to be governed by the public records where the fathers of the lines have observed the English method of spelling the name. Not a few using the terminal "s" have expressed to me regret that it had been added to their name. In this connection it occurs to us to suggest a return to the original mode of spelling the name with the terminal "e" as written upon its translation in Great Britain from its Norman Frank form, might now be accomplished, as the different branches are awakened to an interest in their family history. This would meet the objection felt by some as to the brevity of the name, and its easy confusion with the common noun. This proposed change has been spoken of to some of the leading ones of different branches who are quite ready to fall in with it.

It is approaching three years since I was first made acquainted with the fact that Mr. Isaac Child of Boston, Mass., a descendant in direct line like myself from Benjamin Child, the emigrant, had for many years been gathering the statistics of the early families of the New England emigrants of our name and their descendants. This information was given me by Hon. William Graves Child, M. D., of Bath, Grafton county, N. H., whose special interest in behalf of a Genealogy of the family name was awakened by the connection of his immediate branch with the Dwight family, and whose family record is extensively recorded in Dr. Dwight’s Genealogy; an early ancestor of Dr. Child having married a daughter of Rev. Josiah Dwight, who was ordained and settled as the first Congregational minister of Woodstock, Ct., in 1690. It was upon the suggestion of Dr. Child that I was led to entertain the purpose of attempting a Genealogy on the basis of Mr. Isaac Child’s material. After much deliberate reflection, I decided to undertake the task of reviving the memories of those who had passed away, and placing their names with those now upon the stage, in a form of permanent record. In the incipient stages of the work, a slumbering affection for the memory of those whom in childhood I had been taught to revere was quickened, and incidents of early and later life, almost forgotten, or thought of occasionally as of no great significance, began to be recalled. I could see in them a moral, conveying thoughts noble, inspiring, and instructive. To bring these memories into a form, and weave these incidents into a web of sufficient interest to attract intelligent members of the great fraternity, seemed indeed a work of much labor and not a little delicacy, yet not without some compensating pleasure. The circle of family friends of near kinship, with whom I found myself allied at the commencement, has been enlarging, till almost thousands are now numbered in a quasi kinship, with many of whom, by a daily handshaking through epistolary correspondence, I seem to be brought into bonds of warmest friendship. There is much of common interest, so much of sentiment and sympathy in common, our experiences are found to run naturally in a common channel.

Correspondence was opened with Mr. Child of Boston, who had hitherto been unknown to me, which led to an arrangement with him for placing in my hands the material which he had, to be incorporated in the proposed Genealogy. His matter forms the nucleus of this work; not that it constitutes the larger amount, nor that it was arranged, as incorporated in this work. The filling up of many branches, partially traced by Mr. Isaac Child, and the discovery of many new lines, will swell the volume to threefold or more beyond his material. Yet had it not been for his industry and perseverance, it is probable the present work would not have been undertaken.

The scope of my plan takes a wider range than that embraced in his manuscript. His record has not gone outside of the New England emigrants and their descendants; nor does it extend, with but few exceptions, to the female members of the family and their descendants. The present plan embraces all of the name, whether traceable to New England emigrants, or to ancestors known to have come to our shores at other points, and at later periods. I trace also the descendants of the female members, as well as the males to the latest dates.

It was not possible to foresee the amount of labor and expenditure of money which would be required, nor the numberless occasions of delay, before the work could be completed. Much is due to the earnest desires expressed by many prominent in the branches they represent, that the work should go on to completion, that it has not been abandoned long ago as a hopeless task. For it was early discovered that a superficial production would not only prove unsatisfactory, but be held, as one member expressed it, "with intolerable loathing." There is no lack of intelligence in this widespread family. It would be worse than folly in an enterprise of this kind to ignore this intelligence: and it is with not a little pride and self-gratulation that I record the fact that words of cheer have reached me from outside the family name—from those who view such works as a benefaction to the race: among these is one of New York's most enlightened and patriotic statesmen—Hon. Horatio Seymour, Ex-Governor of this State. In a letter dated Utica, July 10, 1879, he writes:

Dear Sir: I am glad that you mean to get up a record of your family. I have known some of its branches, and held them in high regard. Genealogies do not merely gratify curiosity. They tend to elevate, because they keep in men's minds the character of the best of their race; and these become standards of morals and positions, which men aim to equal. The commandment that we should honor our fathers has purposes more wide and far reaching than is usually supposed. I hope you will go on with your work.

I am truly yours, &c.,

Elias Child, Esq., Utica.

Horatio Seymour.
In the earlier stages of the work I received, unsolicited, the following generous note from Rev. Theophilus Packard, who was for fifty years a citizen of Shelburne, Mass., and twenty-five years of that time pastor of the Congregational Church in that town:

Dear Sir:—I have had sufficient experience in such work (Genealogies) to sympathise with you in the difficulties and delays which must have tried your patience. Yours is a worthy undertaking; and will, if completed, be more highly appreciated by future generations than by those now living. I shall be glad to assist in your work. I have many valuable statistics as to the tribes of Childses, and will gladly and gratuitously furnish them to you if you deem them suited to your profound work.

Wishing you success in your enterprise, I am, respectfully, yours, &c.,

Theophilus Packard.

Additional encouragement is derived from a monthly Journal published in New York city by the "American College of Heraldry and Genealogical Registry," brief extracts from which I quote:

There is an importance attached to carefully written accounts of the origin and dispersion of the individuals of a family, becoming more essential as population increases in this vast country, the asylum of all nationalities.

Often the rights of heritage, through a neglect of records systematically kept in the family, or public documents properly guarded and certified to by qualified officials, are imperiled or utterly lost. Great estates in Europe are lost entirely to heirs who might have had wealth and position had their parents been careful to bring with them when emigrating to the United States, documentary evidence of their lineage in their fatherland.

A few have been fortunate in securing a rich competency to which they had never supposed themselves entitled on account of the many heirs between themselves and an estate; but who in the revolutions of society have suddenly and unexpectedly emerged from poverty to wealth, on the strength of the testimony of a record in a long forgotten book, hardly known to exist, in which was chronicled their descent from a remote ancestry: only known to them through the declarations of a court of chancery.

The indifference of some, and the positive aversion of others, to Genealogies, may break the force of such testimony as these extracts afford, yet they are the views of men of experience and sound judgment. The wisdom of the cautionary language here employed to guard against indifference and neglect on this point, finds confirmation in actual cases of estates waiting for claimants of our own family name. There are credits in the

We are seldom indifferent to the opinions of our friends, and when they coincide with ours, or may be somewhat in advance, they lend encouragement and force to our schemes: and it is a pleasure to place them on record, when in form to be preserved. From one of the many communications from the pen of Judge William Child of Fairlee, Vt., the following extract warmly endorses our enterprise:

I would say there is a pleasure in erecting monuments of marble or granite or other material to the memory of our relatives. Why may not our pleasure or gratification be greatly increased by the possession of a volume containing a brief mention of all the families of our name, whether near or remote, to which we can at any time refer, and ponder upon their good qualities of head and heart therein recorded, and try to emulate or excel in all the virtues that pertain to any individual or family of our name. Sums great and small are continually being expended in erecting memorials to our departed relatives: the smallest of such sums would probably purchase many volumes of the work upon which you are engaged, and which would be as valuable as inscriptions on monumental marble.

Professor Francis Joseph Child, LL. D., of Harvard University, who does not claim to have made the Genealogy of his family a special study, says:

I do not see how a human being should not be glad to know what was his kith and kin, when some one is able to tell him. For one, I thank you and Mr. Isaac Child for the interesting information I have derived, and expect to derive, from the volume preparing.

The almost universal approval of the object set forth in the circulars and letters sent out, renders it difficult to draw a line that may not seem to undervalue the kindly offices of many in helping in our common enterprise. Yet we fail not to appreciate the smallest service, while we specially note the more marked efforts of a goodly number of the friends:

Daniel B. Childs, Esq. of New York city, was among the earliest who prepared a lengthy and lucid record of the prolific branch to which he belongs. Mrs. Alice Walker Child of East Woodstock, Ct., whose fourscore years are a storehouse of useful memories, is entitled to special recognition for her voluntary and effective services in gathering material for this book. George Walker, Esq. of Northford, Ct., who has the blood of two most worthy families in his veins, has poured out the riches of a mind well stored with historical facts and chronological statistics to enrich the volume. Mrs. E. M. Childs Haskins of Brattleboro, Vt., has been indefatigable in collecting records and tracing different lines in the branches of her own and other families. Mrs. William G. Child of North Woodstock, Ct., has been an earnest and untiring worker in this enterprise. Mrs. Cynthia Child May of North Woodstock, Ct., has manifested a laudable interest and rendered valuable service in hunting up records and supplying interesting incidents. Mr. Elias Child of East Woodstock, Ct., who has passed away since this work commenced, greatly facilitated our labor by putting into our hands a transcript of the Woodstock records, as far as relating to the Child family. Wm. H. Childs, Esq. of Niagara Falls, N. Y., was an early and zealous advocate and helper, whose earnestness gave much impulse to the work. Miss Alma Childs, daughter of Hon. Aaron Childs of Ypsilanti, Mich., has wrought cheerfully and effectively in the work. Mrs. E. A. B. Child Rice of Lyons, N. Y., an octogenarian, has devoted much time with good results. Franklin S. Childs, Esq. of Grinnell, Iowa, has been a faithful gleaner of essential material. Roswell Child, Esq. of Moretown, Vt., has done much. Alexander B. Child, Esq. of Granville, Vt., has done good service. Hon. A. L. Childs of Waterloo, N. Y., editor of the Seneca News, has rendered kindly aid through the channels of his popular weekly. Albert Baxter, Esq., editor of Grand Rapids Eagle, Michigan, has rendered aid through his columns and otherwise. Jonathan Child, Esq. of Rochester, Lewis J. Child, Esq. of Philadelphia, Jeff. Co., N. Y., Nathaniel Childs of Washington, D. C., Warren Gould Child, Esq., Ogden City, Moses R. Chamberlain, Esq., Bradford, Vt., Miss Jennie Child of Bath, N. H., and many others whose friendly offices might be named, we sincerely thank.

To Mr. Addison Child of Boston, is due an especial and hearty tribute. His scholarly researches in the United States and Great Britain have furnished us the fascinating and instructive article upon the “Origin of the Name” and very largely the resume of the “English Families.”

I should fail in my duty did I neglect to recognize before the public the efficient aid rendered by my wife, Mrs. S. P. Cleaveland Child, whose autograph has so often appeared in the copious correspondence demanded in the preparation of this volume, and who has been a judicious counsellor and essential helper in its compilation. I have no censures for any who confess they feel no interest in a family Genealogy. Our tastes and judgments are formed from different surroundings, and must necessarily differ somewhat in their character. What to one is a pleasure, to another may be an object of aversion or indifference. So if any have neglected to reply to our courteous requests for family record, or sent a curt response, we accept their estimate.

To meet a feeling that may have obtained to some extent that this enterprise is purely a business affair, entered upon from mercenary motives; and that honorable business rules have been ignored, I desire here more fully to explain my position.

The work was commenced under the impression that six months, or at most one year only, would be required to complete it. It was supposed that the material was already collected; that it only needed proper arrangement, historically and chronologically, to be ready for the press. But it was early apparent that much remained to be done by way of collecting material, if anything like a satisfactory Genealogy was to be prepared. Having advanced to a point where the field could be more fully surveyed, it was seen that a work had been entered upon whose end lay far in the distant future. To abandon the work would disappoint many whose efforts had placed in our hands much valuable material, and, whose enthusiasm had inspired in us sanguine hopes of ultimate success, though the road should prove long in reaching the end. There seemed to be no alternative but to continue the work, relying upon the magnanimity of a family with whom it is our pride to be connected, and whose interest for our success had been so often and distinctly announced, to shield us from essential loss.

Under the impression, presumably, that the sale of the book would reimburse outlays and compensate fairly for time spent, the pecuniary responsibility has been left to myself. I have assumed it not from my abundant wealth, but from a confidence that the many embraced in the family who would want a book would make the burden light.

The estimated cost of the book at $5.00 per copy was made upon the basis of an issue of five hundred copies and of more than one hundred pages less than the present volume contains. And although only about two hundred copies have been ordered, I have decided to publish, trusting there will be; after its issue, the full compliment of five hundred copies called for.

While my pecuniary circumstances would not justify indifference to the results of my labors and expenditures, I have never allowed myself to ignore legitimate business principles. The doctrine of a quid pro quo I fully recognize. But I have been shut up to the necessity of the utmost economy, (not understanding in the beginning what the burdens were to be,) in order to make the enterprise pay the necessary outlay. I have asked no service, however, of such as were not known or supposed to be interested equally with myself in preserving the records of the family name and alliances by marriage, for which I have not paid or offered a full compensation. Those of the family name and those allied by marriage, I have treated in my correspondence more as allies embarked with me in a common cause; such I have found, with few exceptions, ready coadjutors. In two or three instances I have accidentally come upon those that are allied who were preparing some history of the special branch with which they were connected, but with all due difference have refrained from unfriendly interference with their rights. I say this much because I have been misapprehended, and consequently unjustly censured.

Our friends may look for greater perfection in the compilation of this work than it is possible for ordinary intelligence to produce. Errors in dates and names and possibly in incidents will occur, while special care has been taken on our part to secure the greatest exactitude. These errors may arise in some instances from oversight on our part, or they may occur from illegible chirography, or from differences in the reports of different members of a family widely separated and unable to compare notes previous to sending their records: reliance on memory and erroneous tradition may bring out a false record. In view of the manifold difficulties it would be a marvel if no errors were discovered.

Failures to find a complete record will appear in almost any branch. This should not be chargeable to us. We have written and waited long for returns, which either do not come or if sent in part it is with the announcement that the records have been lost or have never been kept: and memory and tradition can supply but imperfectly. Such incidents show the value of a family Genealogy deposited where casualties could not destroy the entire record: scattered among a numerous family and placed, as copies usually are, in public libraries.

Our efforts to bring out a Genealogy that should meet the reasonable expectations of those who are interested have not been limited to letter correspondence: this has been extensive and ought to have accomplished a great deal more. We have visited in person, or by paid agents, state and city libraries, county and town records, in several different states, and spent many days in searching records to discover missing links in branches of families whose records have been given to us incomplete, or to establish some important historical point.

Our sincere thanks are due and heartily tendered to the librarians of the following public libraries: New York State Library, at Albany, N. Y.: Astor and Mercantile Libraries, New York City; State Library, at Hartford, Conn.; Springfield and Worcester, Mass., public libraries: Historical Library, of Worcester, Mass. We also recognize the gentlemanly attentions of county and town clerks, who have rendered us ready facilities for examining such records as could afford us aid in our work.

All sources of information known to hold out promise of success we have explored and exhausted to make the work complete. Any failure to secure the most satisfactory results cannot be more a matter of regret with others than with ourselves. Future research may reveal the link connecting the American emigrants with the English ancestor. The friends can not fail to appreciate the difficulties lying in the way of securing a complete record.

CHARACTERISTICS.

A brief résumé of some of the prominent characteristics of the family may afford pleasant reflections to the reader. If we have not failed to form just opinions from the examinations of early public records, and the historical sketches sent us by descendants of ancestors, and of cotemporaries, there is not a little to admire and imitate.

A spirit of enterprise is a feature of the family which will not escape the notice of the reader. A desire to improve their condition draws them on in new enterprises and efforts to make the most of life. They possess enough of the impulsive element to defy dangers and to grapple with difficulties to obtain a manly independence. As pioneers, no class of men can show a better record. There has been a constant migration of successive generations till, from the Atlantic shores, they have spread over the continent. Sober, industrious, frugal, and with a good degree of intelligence, they have known how to use the appliances of life wisely and effectively to construct comfortable homes and rear intelligent and virtuous families.

One may well be amazed at the incidents in the histories of not a few recorded in this volume. The determination and perseverance with which many have met and overcome difficulties, and the boldness and daring in adventure displayed in others, will thrill the reader and awaken his admiration, if he has a spark of enthusiasm in his composition.

In pursuits, the family is largely agricultural; yet it has its representatives in the various industries of the country. In every generation there are found shrewd and prosperous tradesmen. Men of inventive genius in the mechanic arts, successful manufacturers, and men of thrift in the lesser trades. While few can boast of large fortunes, as measured by present standards, the conditions of medium wealth are usually attained.

For general intelligence and virtue it has a fair record. Education and high culture have been regarded as essential in every generation. The number who have enjoyed the opportunity of a liberal education will favorably compare with most other American families. The proportion who have been employed as public teachers is strikingly large.
Among the educated class there have been those who have risen to prominence in all the learned professions. The legal, the medical and the clerical representatives of the family, in many cases, have attained to no mean eminence. Literary ability and acquirements are by no means lacking. We often find the love of knowledge drawing them away from the bustle and ambitions of life into the quiet seclusions of the study, where they find their sweetest companionship with some history, romance, or philosophical treatise.

Another prominent feature of this family is its patriotism. None have been more ready to expose themselves to the hardships of the camp and the dangers of the battle field than the emigrants and their descendants. They have often risked and sacrificed their all to save their country. Military fame has followed not a few from the battle field, while many from the rank and file have borne for life the scars of many a hard-fought battle. Many of the early emigrants were in the Indian and French wars; their descendants were in the revolutionary struggles; then again in the war of 1812; later in the Mexican war, and finally in the civil war, from 1861 to 1865, which closed a bloody era in the nation's history. In the revolutionary period twenty-two (22) of the family name were of the first company of volunteers and minute men, on the outbreak of hostilities, when Lexington, Mass., was attacked by the British, April 19, 1775. In the following list, which embraces the above twenty-two Massachusetts patriots, many of the descendants will recognize their ancestral head:

Aaron Child, Jonathan Child,
Abel Child, Joshua Child, Abijah Child, Josiah Child,
Abraham Child, Lemuel Child, Daniel Child, Moses Child,
David Child, Phineas Child,
Elijah Child, Reuben Child, Elisha Child, Silas Child, Isaac Child, Samuel Child, John Child, Solomon Child,
Jonah Child, Timothy Child.

A manly independence has ever been more to the race than fame or wealth or position, while none of these would be despised or rejected if they were the legitimate rewards of industry and virtue.

As benefactors of their race they are usually sympathetic and active: they abhor oppression; they are earnest advocates of equal rights. No wrong stirs their blood so certainly as that which is inflicted by the exercise of irresponsible and arbitrary power. Their philanthropy is not limited to that form of oppression which draws its life from organized agencies. It reaches to its subtler forms as found in individual character and in social life. It is not less their mission as benefactors to employ such appliances as Providence has placed in their hands to rescue their fellow men from ignorance, degradation and crime. Their benefactions are distributed upon the broadest principles of Christianity.

It is a family of decided religious tendencies. The early emigrants came to this western world with essentially just religious ideas; with longings for freedom of conscience denied them in the fatherland. Their deep religious convictions are evinced in the conscientious observance of the institutions of our Christian religion. A spirit of toleration has marked its religious history. Independent thought has had full scope: and different religious creeds and philosophical theories have come to exist, yet the mass have built their religious opinions upon the Bible, substantially as interpreted by the Reformers of the 16th and 17th centuries. They have a profound reverence for the Bible. While some of the opinions of the early ancestors are received in a modified form at the present period, the essential truth, as taught in the Divine Book, is warmly cherished and insisted on as constituting the only true basis of sound morality, and a rational theory of accountability to the Divine Lawgiver.

In politics they have distinct and differing opinions, which are maintained with characteristic earnestness and persistency.

It may be of interest to know the impression of a thoughtful and observing member belonging to one of the largest and most intelligent branches as to some of the characteristics of the family. I take pleasure, therefore, in giving an extract from a recent letter from Rev. Increase Child of Frewsburgh, Chautauqua county, N. Y.:
I should like to give you some of my impressions in regard to the Child family. I hope, too, you will somewhere in your work endeavor to give some of the more prominent characteristics of our family. I would say that during my early life I was told over and over again that I was not a Child, but a Deake, my mother's boy. So that I used to think of the Child family as almost another family. For that reason I have thought that I could think and speak of them somewhat impartially and independently; and I have often taken a foolish pride in trying to do so. As I have grown older, friends have often said to me, "You are getting to be more of a Child than you used to be;" and it seems so to me also. However this may be, I feel a great aversion to being made conspicuous. Sometimes I suffer very much from this feeling. I like to see and hear all that is going on, but give me a quiet seat in the corner. I think this is characteristic of our family. Perhaps our natural love of ease is at the bottom of it. I have heard my father say many times that the Child family were lazy. I do not admit that, as we commonly use language, but perhaps there is some ground for it, especially if it be true, as old Dr. Wayland used to say, that mankind are as lazy as they can be. Of the family, my impressions are derived, first, from my grandfather, Judge Salmon Child and his brothers; and second, from my own observation. My impression is that they are a benevolent, virtuous and intelligent people; not particularly ambitious, loving ease and quiet, but possessed of a considerable degree of latent power, which has never been developed as it should have been. They are a people who love to read and speculate; love their friends, love to have friends and serve them, and are not particularly adapted to the accumulation of property. My impression is that they love order and a good style of things, and are sufficiently conservative to keep them from an extreme radicalism or fanaticism. At the same time they wish to know the reason of things too well to follow a blind orthodoxy; in other words, there is a certain tendency to rationalism. Hence, instead of the old New England orthodoxy, you find Baptists, Methodists and Universalists, even, among them. So far as I know the Child family, they love liberty and have a deep-seated hatred of oppression of every form: a people of quick sympathies and impulsive nature, capable of enjoying much and suffering much. A people who have accomplished much, but who ought to have accomplished much more. Their love of ease and of the pleasures of knowledge and refinement, as well as love of home has often prevented them from achieving what they were capable of.

This estimate accords with my own convictions, derived from my correspondence and personal knowledge of many members of the family.

In a brief recapitulation of some of the characteristics of this family, viz., its robust character, mentally and physically, its general intelligence, its enterprise, its independence in thought and action, its sobriety and industry, its patriotism and philanthropy, and its reverence for divine authority—it will be found that it is a fair inference that these elements aptly constitute the family a valuable factor in rearing the structures of prosperous communities, for which they challenge the respect and confidence of their fellow citizens.

Carlyle says, "the writers of newspapers, pamphlets, books, poems—these are the real working, effective church of a modern country." The compilers of this book feeling the desirability that all persons should be made acquainted with the characters, noble deeds and experiences of their ancestry, and recognizing the fact that such knowledge is not born with a person, but must come by cultivation on these topics, have sought so to embody the results of their explorations and collations, as to make the work as truly instructive and elevating as it can be entertaining, or suitable for mere matter of reference.

The tradition handed down in many branches as we have found, that from three emigrant brothers have sprung all of the name, must be overturned by the record as we find it. A like tradition has been widespread in other families, with no better foundation.

Our pleasant labor is ended: its results you have. That our success will be variously estimated is a matter of course. We deprecate no fair criticism, but crave your acceptance of our honest effort to give a true report of our honest, honorable family (whose nobility is that of the higher nature), in plain ungarished Anglo-Saxon phrase.

Elias Child.
Origin and Etymology of the Surname Child.

The name Child, in common with many other modern names, is derived from Hildr of the Norse mythology. The name of this deity can in turn be traced to the rudimental and interchangeable al, el, il, ol, the feracious root of many terms and words expressive of holiness, power, and supernatural attributes in all the languages and religions derived from the Arians. This would include the Solar and Hellenic myths from which the Norse came, and the Jewish Hagiology. Hild became synonymous with Bel with the Scandinavians, and hence a popular protonym with their belligerent descendants in the early warlike centuries. It also became a Valkyrian term for maiden, and a fertile root in the nomenclature of the Norse sagas.

Its dual significance and its descent from mythic to historical times can be traced in that beautiful epic, the Nebelungen Lied, the Hied of the north.

After the “Love breathing Kreimhild” has supplanted the “Flower maiden Brynhild” and immolated her entire family, she is herself taken off by Hildebrand (war sword). [The etymon has been italicized throughout and quotations made from the saga, to show its constant use.]

“"The King sat at the festive board beside the Queen Brynhild."
"Who never felt injured pang as when she saw Kreimhild."
* * * * * * * *

“It happened in those quiet times when good Queen Helicha died,
That Etzel ruler of the Huns desiring other bride,
Was by his friends and courtiers, told of Burgund’s widow famed For lofty mind and perfect form, Kreimhild was she named.”

Etzel is supposed to have been Atala the “Scourge of God.”
He afterwards, according to Goldsmith, married Ildica (beautiful maid), and died on their nuptial night. Childe is first used as a title for King in this saga, “Dethilde the youthful Margravine, now gave her lily hand To Giselder, the youngest King of famous Burgund land,” or, as rendered in a more graceful version, “This done, with gentle gesture the damsel meek and mild
By the hand yet trembling, took Giselder the Childe.”
A son, of Brynhilde, the "Flower maiden," assumed the Burgundian throne in A. D. 466, under the title of Childeric (Battle Empire). His ponderous sword (almost as large as the wonderful Gram or Bal'mang of his ancestor, forged by Volkind, the Norse Vulcan) was taken from his tomb in the last century, and is now preserved in the Louvre. A brother of Meroveus had previously, in A. D. 451, aided by Atala, made himself King of the Ripuarian Franks and taken the title of Childeric (Battle Splendor). He was converted from heathenism by his wife Clothilde, baptized Clochilde, whereupon the Pope bestowed upon him the title of "first Christian King," and "eldest son of the church," which the legitimate kings of France proudly retained. He was succeeded by Childeric, the father of Childebert (Bright Warrior), who became King of the Parigii. Amalric, King of the Visigoths, married Childebert's sister, and was by him assassinated for his cruelty to her.

Gaidoz, in his "French Folk Lore," published in 1878, says that this sister was the heroine of the "Chanson de Clochilde," from which Perrault founded his story of La Barbe Bleue.

Many of the kings of France prefixed Childe to their cognomens, from the fifth to the tenth centuries, after which the title descended to the eldest son. A large number of the kings, queens, and allodial rulers of Europe during this time, derived their appellation from this root. The Goths carried it to Spain. The great Visigothic King Pelayo, named his son Hildeflans (Eager in war), but southern tongues refused to pronounce the harsh aspirate, and softened it into Alfonso, a title borne by some scores of kings since. The belligerent monk Hildebrand (war sword) carried his warlike name and sword (literally) to Italy, in the eleventh century, and by the help of the imperial Matthilde, seated himself on the Papal throne. The Tuscans euphonized his Gallic name into Aldovrandino, since borne by the Counts D'Este. While the Goths and Vandals were blending their Norse terms with the Latin and Romance idioms of the south, hordes of Scandinavian and Teutonic adventurers were carrying their sharp swords and aspirated words to the shores of Great Britain. There is no pantographical history of Britain from the egress of the Romans to the ingress of the Teutons, or to the advent of the Norman French. The blurred record of the race-struggles, and the persistence of the fittest, is written in the idiomatic names of their battlefields, bretwolds, and abiding places. The Norse war term Hild from the belli- cose spirit of the times, became a popular patronym. Doomesday Book² (A.D. 1083) registers over three hundred towns, and wapentakes (hundreds) bearing this synonym, with suffices indicating their environments and the tribe that adopted it, as Childewolde, Childness, Child thorpe, cote. ton. Childhan, by, bre, dale, ford, &c., besides many Latin terminations. Cîtecomb, now Childcomb, near Winchester, had nine churches at the time of the Domesday survey. But like the protographs of the pal-limsests, those allodial records have been so rewritten, over-written, overgrown and buried by newer accretions, that most of them are now veiled to all except to the skilled eye of the archaeologist. Although four out of the five British authors who wrote before the Conquest, Güdias, Aldhelm, Hîlda of Lindisfarne, and Alcuin, wore Thor's mark in their names, they were soldiers of the cross only, and wrote but little secular history. Some legends that floated down the stream of time were gathered by the early English writers. Robert of Gloucester preserved the legend of "*Chylde Waween, King Lothe's son."

that "there are several persons in Domesday book, bearing the surname or title of Child, and among them the Kentish Ahnod, and Godewin, Abbot of Westminster," and that the "*great (Eduuard) when he rode into Canterbury." He also says that, "Eduuard Child of Domesday Book, had a third part of the Archbishop of York's Church at Wyne in Lancashire;" and Sporley says, that "*Eduinus, called Goduinus Child, suc-

of William the Conqueror, which is now in the exchequer, in two volumes.
The larger contains a survey of all the lands in most of the counties in England, and the less, some counties not at first surveyed. The Book of Domesday was begun by five justices, assigned for that purpose in each county, in the year 1081, and finished in 1086. It was of such authority that the Conqueror himself submitted, in some cases wherein he was concerned, to be governed by it. Camden calls this book the Tax Book of

He married Gytha, All Jarl's sister, and their daughter Edgytha married Eduuard, who gained the sobriquet of Saint, or Confessor, by abjuring his marital right too continually." Hasted, in his History of Kent, says that Alnod Cylld was a younger brother of King Harold, who from the royalty of his kindred, had the addition of Cild," and that "one of his manors was given by William the Conqueror to Battle Abbey." KILHAM and others assert that Leuuric Child of Doomesday Book, was Earl Leofric of Mercia and Coventry, the husband of Lady Godiva, whose irresistible charms proved so fatal to poor Peeping Tom. Her personal merits are commemorated in song, stone, and statute, and revived yearly by a civic procession in which her nai-veté is personated modo et forma. The term Childe is generally used as a title in Doomesday Book: indeed surnames were almost unknown to Anglo-Saxon England, and were introduced by the Norman French during the last Saxon and first Norman reigns. The French prefix sur is a contraction from the Latin super, over, and the surname, as it indicates, was not at first written on the line with, but over the Christian name, between the lines, in smaller letters. It is so written over these names in Cild Cild Cild Cild Doomesday Book; Eduuinus, Brixi, Leuinlus, Ulft. Ulft held wapentakes in Lincolns'cire, Snottings'cire (Nottingham), and Derbys'cire. This would indicate that in these cases it was used as a sur, or over-name. It was used as the equivalent of prince and knight by the earliest writers. NARES says, prince, Lower, knight, and both that it was a title held by the eldest son of a king or earl, "until he inherited the title of his ancestors or gained new honors by his prowess."

"And yonder lives the Childe of Elle,
A young and comely Knight."

ORIGIN AND ETYMOLOGY OF THE SURNAME CHILD.

"Chylde Rowland to the dark tower came."

_Lear_ iii. 4.

"Chylde Tristam prayed that he might go," &c.

_Fairie Queen_, vi. 34.

A manuscript by Chaucer, now in the British Museum, quaintly commemorates the legend of "Childe Bristow," who gained his title not by noble descent or prowess in arms, but by devoting his patrimony in restitution of that wrongfully gotten, and in prayers for the redemption of his father's soul from purgatory, after which new riches flowed in upon him; he "First was rich and Sithen bare, and Sithen richer than ever he were."

Byron's fictitious application of the historic _Childe Harold_ to his hero, in fact to himself, is a euphemism:

"Childe Harold was he hight; but whence his name
And lineage long, it suits me not to say;
Suffice it that perchance they were of fame,
And had been glorious in another day."

The title, profession, calling, location, or some characteristic of the individual was generally adopted as the surname. As the title Childe became gradually obsolete it was generally adopted as a surname by descendants or dependants. Etymology indicates and former usage requires that the name should be written Childe. If the original or correct spelling is ever generally restored, it will distinguish the name from the noun. The percentage of families of the name, retaining the original final "e," is larger in England than America, while those adding a final "s" is much less. None of the legitimate or higher families in England use the "s." About one in four of the name, graduates of Oxford University since 1856, have used "e" final, while none have added the "s." Of sixty-four of the names in the London Commercial Directory and twenty-six in the Court Directory for 1878, fourteen and seven, respectively, add the final "s." The latter spelling is a solecism, and Childs is a misnomer of modern growth and uncertain origin. Probably it arose from a negligent retention of the apostrophic "s" after the elision of the object and mark of the genitive case, as Childs for Child's (House), Childs broder for Child's brother, and Child's cote (side) appear as names in Doomesday Book.

Eadulf Evilchild was made Thane of Northumbria by Edgar, in 971. We gather from the _Camden Publications_, that Walter Childe was living near Hereford in 1294, and was granted an annuity for life by Bishop Swinefield; that Thomas Childe was tenant of the Priory of St. Mary's, Worcester, in 1304; that Johani Childe lived near Finchdale, Durham, in 1362; and that Lawrence Child was Bishop of St. Asaph's in 1382; "That Thomas Childe presented the judges of Wigorn (Worcester) assizes with a lambe and vi. artichokes valued at 12 pence, in 1601:"

There are several instances in the early history of England where the name took the French form, L'Enfant. Indeed, although the term undoubtedly came to the Anglo-Saxon through the Frankish form of the Scandinavian, there are indications that it was also brought to Anglo-Norman England in the Latinized French names of the conqueror's followers. In 1350, Roger Baldwin, a descendant of the Bawdwins of the Roll of Battle Abbey married Jane, daughter of Wm. de Wigley by Alice LeChilde, great granddaughter of John L'Enfant, who married Emblema, daughter of Richard Acheley, descendant of William Achilles, named in the Festa de Nevelle of Henry Third's time.

Having traced this Teutonic term from its apotheosis in the Norse mythology through a gradual avatar to a common surname in England and America, we will now trace its further descent and differentiation from a name to a noun, the correlative to parent, and follow it through some of its inflections. There has always been a tendency to appropriate and assimilate titles and words of dignity from the specific to the generic. Such may have been the process whereby Child came to be a generic term for the young of the human species of either sex, and a declinable word. From an Ethnic term for Deity, it became that of supernatural attributes, and descended by divine right to kings: by primogeniture to their eldest sons, by etiquette to other sons, by usage to all sons, and by convenience to all human progeny, regardless of sex. The fact that this term was primarily restricted to males in England, would strengthen this view, if its equivalents in other dialects did not sometimes limit it to females. Some authorities, not very reliable, have asserted that it was so used in Warwickshire. The fact that Shakespeare, in the "Winter's Tale," makes the old shepherd exclaim on finding Perdita, "What have we here?
Mercy on's, a barne, a very pretty barne; a boy or a child, I wonder?" has not much weight when it is remembered that the scene of that drama was laid in a foreign country, of Slavonic origin, filiated with the Teutonic. If Prof. Caro is correct in his exhaustive commentary on that drama, recently published (1878), Shakespeare founded it upon an old Lithuanian ballad, brought to England in the fourteenth century. In this case he may have followed the original text. It is more than probable that the use of the word child, for progeny, came from an earlier and similar differentiation in the Keltic and Gothic tongues. There was an unipersonal blending of the generative principle inherent in all cosmologies, and especially those of the sun or nature myths. The scheme and nomenclature of the northern mythologies was derived from Aryan roots.

Terms denoting both muliebritiy and virility have been derived from those androgynous roots, and applied arbitrarily and interchangeably by different nations. The Teutons called the sun female and the moon male. Hild was a Norse term for both hero and maiden; from the latter came Kulla, meaning a maid and a brood, in Danish, and Hilda and Hulda, almost generic terms for maiden, in English. Cen, cyn, kyn, cymric are allied words of kindred meaning. Some etymologists have derived child (offspring) from Anglo-Saxon cenned or Danish kulla, the past participle of kennen, and kullden, to bring forth, while others trace it to the Gothic kilthei (womb) and Latin cyma, from the Greek, a sprout or embryo. However derived, early English writers use the word freely, and with some inflections rarely used now. Wyclif uses the phrase “Eve chylled,” &c., in his translation of the Bible, 1380. Chaucer uses chylled and kinded for begotten—“chosen of Joseph whom he took to wive, unknowing him childed by miracle.” Drayton writes.

"Who having in her youth her childing felt the woe,
Her lord's embraces she never more would know."

Addison Child.
It may interest some to know that in the various works of Heraldry, in which we have made diligent and exhaustive search for the establishment of the line, the arms, and the name, of which the more prominent are Clark, DeBret, Lodge, and numerous editions of Burke, we have never found the name written with the terminal "s." For the curiously inclined we append this list of names in the differing spelling, as culled from these works:

These three men were, perhaps, the most noteworthy and distinguished individuals of any bearing the name of Child. They all raised themselves to eminence, occupied prominent positions, both in public and private life, and became the founders of opulent families in the last half of the seventeenth century. The first as a civic and military ruler, the second as a merchant, political economist and philanthropist, and the latter as a banker, goldsmith and sociologist.

They were descendants of a family whose chief was among the first to adopt a surname, and probably assumed his Saxon title (Childe) as such, towards the end of the Saxon domination in England. Following the usage of the higher classes, after the Norman-French conquest, members of the family took the Latinized French form of the name (L’Enfant) for some generations. Several individuals of the name were concerned in Henry Second’s conquest of Ireland and its subsequent government in the twelfth century; and others seated themselves at Shrewsbury, Salop county, and Pool-Court, Pennock and Northwick, in the county of Worcester. Baldwin Childe and Robert L’Enfant are mentioned in the Cartulary of St. Nicholas, Essex, and the latter was Provost of Shrewsbury in Henry Third’s time, and signed Robert L’Enfant as a witness, and Le Childe to other documents. Richard Le Child was lord of the manor of Northwick in 1320, and was succeeded by his two sons—William Le Childe in 1350, and Thomas Le Childe in 1353, and by his grandson, Thomas Le Childe, who was escheater for the county in 1428. The latter was the progenitor of William Childe of Northwick, Edmund Childe of the same, and Wm. Child high sheriff of Worcestershire, in 1586, and William Child of Pensax, high sheriff in 1599, and William, lord of the manor of Northwick, in 1634. The sons of the latter, Thomas of Northwick, William and John Child, one or more of whom, probably the two younger, migrated to the neighborhood of London previous to Charles First's time. They intermarried with the Wheeler family, originally of Wiltshire, but goldsmiths of "The Marygold," Temple Bar, Fleet street, London, in James First's time. A son, Richard Childe, the father of Sir John and Sir Josiah Child of this article, became a merchant of London, trading with the West Indies and the American colonies, and high sheriff of Bedfordshire at the commencement of the long Parliament in 1640. He was the great grandson of the second high sheriff of Queen Bess' time.

There is some diversity in statements regarding the parentage of Sir John Child. Both Collins and Betham state that he was a son of John of London, gentleman, by Frances, daughter of Francis Goodyear of Hereford. Macaulay, Bourne, and later writers say he was a brother of Sir Josiah, whose father was Richard, and as they quote from his contemporaries, White, Carey, Pierce, Butler, Hamilton, Papillion, and the records of the House of Commons, they are most likely to be right. Palfrey speaks of "that astute London merchant, Sir Josiah Child," as the brother of the "factious Dr. Child, whose experience in Massachusetts was not likely to have made his brother friendly to that colony." If they bore this relationship, the subject of this article must have been the Maj. John Child who defended his brother (the Doctor) so ably in the "Jonah cast up in London," 1647, and who subsequently sought a more independent field of action in the infant English colony of the east. Dr. Robert Child was a distinguished graduate of Ben-net's College, of the University of Cambridge, and of the most renowned medical school of the world, that of Padua, Italy, from which he received his medical diploma. He came to Boston by the advice of such men as Emanuel Downing, John Winthrop, Jr. and Hugh Peters, with other capitalists, to assist in developing the mineral wealth of the new country. He investigated, at that early day, the deposit of black lead in Worcester county, Mass., and of iron at Braintree and Saugus, Mass., and was one of the original proprietors of the iron works at the latter places, the first established in America.

He purchased of Sir Richard Vines, in 1645, the site of Biddeford, Me., and was invested with the Patent, "livery and seisin" of the same, which William Phillips of Boston subsequently acquired. That same year the notable Rev. Hugh Peters wrote Gov. John Winthrop: "Dr. Child is come: that honest man, who will be of exceeding great use, if the country know how to improve him: indeed he is very, very useful. I pray let us not play tricks with such men by our jealousyes." How necessary, but disregarded, this admonition was, subsequent events proved. Having enlarged views, he held that the Charter guaranteed political and religious liberties, that were arbitrarily abridged by the Puritan rulers. His claiming the right of petition, and resorting to it for redress, so roused the ire, hatred and fear of the colonial magistrates, that they not only traduced, amerced, imprisoned and expelled him from the country, but invoked the vengeance of God upon his head, and did not hesitate to ascribe the accidental stumble and injury of a messenger carrying his petition, the burning of a house, and the natural phenomenon of a storm at sea, to his special intervention. John Cotton, in his sermon, compared his petition to a Jonah, and precatorily exhorted passengers by sea, in case they perceived God's special anger rising, to search for the hidden petition, appease Him and exorcise their ship by giving it to the clamorous waves." This they afterwards alleged they piously affected, and "God stilled the troubled waters." They and the All-Seeing were imposed upon, however, by a counterfeit. The bona fide Jonah (petition) arrived with them safely in London. These incidents suggested the title to Major John Child's disquisition, "New England's Jonah cast up at London."

Gov. Winthrop says Dr. Child's "hopes and endeavors had been blasted by the special providence of the Lord." He remained in England, but retained the friendship and became a valued correspondent of John Winthrop, Jr., imparting to him the developments made in the world of science, to which he henceforth devoted himself. 17 The names of these two individuals seldom appear in the annals of New England after this, but that of their younger brother, Josiah, is often referred to. Little else is known of Maj. John Child, except that he had command of a regiment in Kent, 18 until he went to India, in 1653, and was subsequently made Governor of Bombay and Calcutta, and commander of all the land and naval forces of England in the East. The title of "His Excellency" was conferred upon him by Parliament, in 1682, 19 and King James II. made him a baronet as "Sir John Child of Surat," in 1684. He was a powerful coadjutor of his brother, Sir Josiah, executing his imperious instructions with a swift, sure hand. His enemies asserted that he was grasping and violent, ruling arbitrarily, and that he assumed sovereign powers, declaring war and governing by martial law upon his own responsibility. 20 This his friends justified upon the ground that it required twelve months to transmit instruction from the home government, and while surrounded by powerful and warlike enemies, there were times when there was not a government armed vessel within ten thousand miles. 21 He was much blamed as all English Colonial Governors have ever been since, under similar circumstances, for becoming at war with the Great Mogul, King Aurengzebe, but history has shown that it was made necessary by the machinations of his political enemies. All recriminations were ended by his death, in 1691, just after he had signed a protocol of peace. 22 Later writers say "he had the reputation of being a person of sobriety, wisdom, truth, and courage, esteemed and beloved by all the people of all the nations of the East." 23 He had two sisters married to members of the East Indian Company at Bombay. 24 He married Mary, daughter of John Shackston, deputy governor, and had issue—John who died in 1718, and Sir Caesar, who married Hester, daughter of John Vance of Loudon, goldsmith, by whom he had Sir Caesar, the father of Sir Caesar, with whom the baronetcy became extinct, in 1753. 25

Sir Josiah Child, born in 1630, younger brother of Governor John Child, and son of the London merchant, Richard Child, succeeded to his father's business. He became the first royal contractor for supplying the naval docks at Portsmouth, England, with ship timber from the coasts of North America. British archives show that government furnished his ships with convoys through the pirate-infested English Channel, and that they awarded him, in 1665, £25 and £33 each for masts, twenty and twenty-five inches in diameter. He also engaged in brewing, and at the death of Timothy Alsop, he succeeded him as brewer to the King. In 1666 Charles II. recommended him to the "Honorable Company of London Brewers," as "having done faithful service in supplying the royal household and navy with beer." But his greatest achievement was in the East. The wealth and importance of the Indies were concressive and concurrent with his own. Thornbury styles him the "eminent political economist, president and formulator of the first East India Company." The two cities which he practically founded, Calcutta and Bombay, aggregate more inhabitants to-day than the prefounded cities of New York and Boston. "Sir George Gough attributes his wealth and elevation to having had while young the advice of the great Sir Josiah Child." But his sound judgment, liberal views, commercial enterprise and personal patronage were not unrecognized in the Western Hemisphere. William Vaughn, a wealthy merchant of Portsmouth, N. H., when unjustly imprisoned by Governor Cranfield, in writing his friend, William Weare, who had escaped to London says: "I send you a letter to my master, Sir Josiah Child; wait on him while he reads it, and attend to his directions, if God moves his heart to do aught for us." Palfrey says: "Sir Josiah was not an acknowledged nonconformist, but had always upheld religious liberty, and was a judicious counselor for the colonies;" that "he was one of that class of active and important traders whose stubborn character and whose heavy purse had for fifty years prolonged the doubtful conflict," meaning that waged between the colony and the home government. He questioned the expediency of enacting the Navigation Act, which required all British colonies to confine their commerce to the ships and ports of the mother country, and which proved so obnoxious to the colonies: 32 and doubted whether the inconvenience it brought with it be not greater than the convenience; 33 but he upheld its principles, and urged that a “country was better off without, than with, a colony competing with home interests.” 34 In his “New Discourse on Trade” he compared the colonies of the Round Heads in New England with those of the Cavaliers in Virginia and Antigua, and showed the superiority of the first, and warned his countrymen “that New England was the most prejudicial plantation to the kingdom, for the reason of its competition in articles produced in England, its capacity for building ships and raising seamen, and consequent growing naval strength, and because of its comparative freedom from negro slavery.” 35

Sir Josiah was the first to perceive and warn his government of the correlation between the stubborn bigotry, self-will and obstinacy of the Puritan character and the event that climaxed at Bunker Hill a century afterwards, in religious, commercial and political independence. Sir Josiah’s national sympathies were always with the New England colonies and unaffected by the narrow bigotry and petty tyrannies of their rulers; but his large grasp of commercial polity made him cosmopolitan, and when the colonies differentiated their interests from those of the mother country his patriotism led him to uphold the latter. Thornbury 36 states that Sir Josiah was once a partner—and others, that he was a brother—of Sir Francis Child, founder of the banking firm of Child & Co., but T. G. H. Price, 37 a present member of that firm, who has access to their early books, says that both these statements are incorrect, but that he was closely related to him through his father, and also through the Wheelers. He was born May 7, 1630, 38 and must, with all his other enterprises, have become interested in oriental trade early in life. Tyndal says that “He applied himself chiefly to the East India trade, which, by his management, was raised so high that it drew much envy and jealousy upon himself and the company." The shares in the East India Company advanced during his presidency from £70 in 1664, to £370 in 1691. Macaulay\(^{39}\) says: "There was one great man pointed out on the Royal Exchange, as having by judicious or lucky purchases of stock, created in no long time, an estate of twenty thousand a year. This commercial grandee, who in wealth and in the influence that attend wealth, vied with the greatest nobles of his time, was Sir Josiah Child." He was by far the richest member of the East India Company, with one-third of its stock on his own hands and that of his dependents.\(^{40}\) Bourne\(^{41}\) says: "From the time of Charles Second's accession Sir Josiah became a favorite at Court, doing his share of money lending to the spendthrift king, and gaining esteem by the honest deportment, which even the most dishonest well knew how to appreciate." Macaulay devotes many pages to him in his History of England, Vol. IV., pp. 108 to 119, describing his immense wealth, superior talent, great force of character and potency in controlling not only his associates, but "opposing majorities in Parliament, kings, queens, and the powers of the East." Sir Josiah had always been a whig, and won the special hatred of the Duke of York by his tolerant spirit and bold defence of schismatics: but on the dissolution of the Oxford Parliament he separated from his old friends and formed a close alliance with the Tories. "When the Court was all powerful in the state, he became all powerful at the Court."

He distributed his wealth with a judicious prodigality. Charles II. accepted a present of 10,000 guineas and his brother, the Duke of York, a like sum of 10,000 guineas, and readily became a stockholder in his company. "All who could help or hurt at Court, ministers, mistresses, priests, were kept in good humor by presents of shawls and silks, bird's nests and attar of roses, purses of diamonds and bags of guineas."\(^{42}\) Very soon, however, all was changed, the revolution of '88 brought in a whig government: the connections that had been his boasts were now its weakness. The king was in exile. the judge who had decreed his doings legitimate was a prisoner, the great whig merchants whom he had expelled from the direction of the company demanded justice and vengeance. But his indomitable courage and persistent will quailed not, and prevailed. He began with William and Mary, and his enemies reported that he gave the leaders in Parliament 100,000 pounds sterling to stave off the repeal of the charter of his company. These political opponents accused both himself and his brother, Sir John, Governor of the East Indies, of the most frightful atrocities, usurpations and ponderous briberies in the administrations of the company's affairs. Scores of volumes of speeches, letters and essays upon the exciting subject were printed and read. During all this the most exalted families in the realm were seeking alliance with his, and William III. conferred a baronetcy on his son Josiah. His powerful enemies went so far as to demand his dismissal forever from the direction of the company, and reported that the Great Mogul had made a like degradation of his brother, Sir John, a condition of peace. But before any action was taken death relieved the latter, leaving Sir Josiah to climb successfully the excelsior heights of his ambition alone.

He seems to have been the best hated man of his day. But after the political animosities of the day had been assuaged by time, and all jealousy and envy put to rest by his death, most authorities agree in characterizing him as a man of great probity and enlightened views. Macaulay says that his success in accumulating great wealth and in forwarding the interests of the company of which he was the head, made him somewhat haughty and imperious, and gave color to some of the envious charges brought against him by his enemies; but that all conceded "that with all his love of money making his main object was to establish the sovereignty of England in the East; and to him, more than any other man is this due." Even at that early day he was assiduous in urging the Japanese ambassadors, then in London, to open the trade of their country to England. Tyndal says that "he had a compass of knowledge and apprehension unusual to men of his profession." His "Observations Concerning Trade and Interest on Money," written at his country seat, Wanstead, during a leisure forced upon him by the prevalence of the great plague of 1665, contain ideas far in advance of his day and generation. At that time the commerce of England was in the hands of the opulent Netherlanders. He gave fifteen reasons why his countrymen should imitate their policy, the soundness of which the course of trade since has proven. Only the most advanced commercial nations have yet arrived at the truth of the ideas he evolved on the use and interest of money. He wrote an Essay on the best practical methods of elevating the lower classes of London, and did much personally to ameliorate their condition. He was a patron and large benefactor of Christ Hospital. The advanced thoughts which he put forth were combatted by the conservatives of the day, especially those on the science of money, in a paper war that continued long after his death.

Evelyn's" assertion "that there were those who remembered him as a merchant's apprentice, sweeping out one of the counting-houses of the city," was probably true, but that implied no menial service, for in those days every young aspirant for commercial eminence, had to begin at the bottom round and mount the ladder through a regular apprenticeship, however well born. While looking after his royal contracts for shiptimber at Portsmouth, England, in early life, he met with and married Anne Bout 45 of that city, by whom he had two sons who died young, and one daughter who "nobly wedded." He married second Mary Atwood of Hackney, by whom he had a son, baronetized as Sir Josiah Child by William III., 1692, who died without issue, in 1704, and two daughters, who also "nobly wedded." He took for his third wife Emma, daughter of Sir Henry Bernard, and had by her Bernard Child, who died in 1698, and Sir Richard Child, made Baron of Newton and Viscount Castlemaine in 1718, and Earl Tylney in 1732. Sir Richard married Dorothy, daughter of John Glynne, and granddaughter of Francis Tylney of Rotherwick, and added Tylney to his name. He had Richard, first Earl Tylney, and John, second Earl Tylney, both of whom died childless, and a daughter Emma, who married Sir Robert Long of Dracott, and had Sir James Tylney Long, who died without issue, and Catherine, who married "William the Worthless," Viscount Wellesley, fifth Earl of Mornington, who assumed the name Tylney Long. His son, William Richard Arthur Pole Tylney Long Wellesley, sixth

Earl of Wellsley, "ended the richest merchant family of the seventeenth century."\(^{49}\)

The first Sir Josiah's third wife, Emma, survived her husband twenty-six years, dying in 1725, "at which time she was so nearly allied to so many of the prime nobility, that eleven dukes and duchesses used to ask her blessing, and above fifty great families went into mourning for her."\(^{50}\)

Soon after his first marriage Sir Josiah purchased Wanstead House, where eighty years before the Earl of Leicester entertained most devotedly his royal mistress, Queen Elizabeth.\(^{51}\)

Here the great merchant " expended immense sums in excavating fish ponds and in planting whole square miles of barren land with walnut trees."\(^{52}\) He was made a baronet by Charles II. in 1678, and died at Wanstead, in 1699.

While Sir Josiah was acquiring distinction in unfolding the maxims and laying the foundations of modern commerce, successfully contending with and controlling whig cabals and tory cabinets, amassing wealth, with his hand on the rudder of his fortune ten thousand miles away, his cousin, Sir Francis Child, was gaining a like distinction by initiating, and opulence by practicing, the system of modern banking.

Descending from the same ancient stock, his immediate progenitors seated themselves at Heddington, Wiltshire, from whence Francis migrated to London, in Charles First's reign.\(^{53}\)

He was apprenticed to a goldsmith's firm whose business had been conducted by his relatives, the Wheelers, at the sign of "Ye Marrigold, Temple Bar, No. 1 Fleet street," from time immemorial. Francis\(^{54}\) says "the books of Child & Co. go back to 1620, and refer to previous documents." He married his cousin Elizabeth, only daughter and heiress of his uncle, the second William Wheeler,\(^{55}\) of the firm of which he and his descendants subsequently became the head.

toilet and table, costing pounds where the same in porcelain cost shillings now. This made the goldsmith's craft an important and lucrative one. Formerly the nobility and wealthy classes kept their money and valuables in "cash boxes," in their castles and domiciles, but as their wealth increased and their armed retainers decreased, this became unsafe. They then used the mint in the Tower of London as a safe deposit. But Charles I. perfidiously seized and confiscated all those deposits. They then made the rich goldsmiths their custodians. This led the latter to keeping "running cashes" and to making interest bearing loans to tradespeople, and others, on pawns or pledges, thus adding inceptive banking to their craft. Child & Co. are inserted in the little London Directory for 1677, as "goldsmiths keeping running cashes." They were the first to separate the two callings. Francis states "that the celebrity of the first banking-house belongs by common consent to Mr. Francis Child." There is an account on their ledgers opened in 1669, before they divorced the two vocations, under the head of "Pawns." changed a few years later to "P." which has been brought forward from ledger to ledger under this title as their collateral loan account, for two hundred and ten years.

The record of this family of bankers is so interwoven, warp and woof, with that of Temple Bar, the Marygold and their environs, that any narrative of either, without frequent reference to the others would be perfunctory indeed. Many of their customers addressed their cheques to "Mr. Alderman Child and partner, at ye Marygold, next door to Temple Bar;" sometimes "next door to the Devil Taverne." When the heads of the firm were lord mayors of London, the Earl of Oxford addressed his cheques "To the Worshipful the Lord Mayor & Co., at Temple Bar." Like most of the distinctive appellations of the goldsmiths of London, the sign of the Marygold originated in that of a tavern. It was the usage for succeeding occupants to retain the sign, without reference to the vocation. "Messrs. Child's banking house was in King James First's reign, a public ordinary, the sign being the Marygold." When it came into the occupation of the goldsmiths is not definitely known, but probably about 1620, as the last mention of it as a public house was on St. Thomas' day, December 21, 1619, when it was presented to the ward-mote “for disturbing its next neighbors late in the nights, from time to time, by ill disorders.” The goldsmiths held it on a ground rent. Sir Francis Child put the present front to the Marygold in 1666, the year of the great fire of London, although the conflagration did not reach it. An old document, still extant, shows that Sir Francis renewed his lease of the Marygold from the “Feast of St. Michael the archangel, 1707, and the Sugar Loaf and Green Lettuce, 1714, at a yearly rental of £60 for sixty-one years.” The Sugar Loaf was an old London tavern, directly in the rear of the Marygold. Sir Francis repaired it in 1707 and added it to his banking premises. He subsequently purchased for £2,800 the famous tavern popularly called the “Old Devil” from its sign. “St. Dunstan pulling the Devil’s nose,” which adjoined, and erected a block of houses now known as “Child’s Place.” The “Old Devil” was the favorite resort of Ben Jonson, where he lorded it over his confrères that were “sealed of the tribe of Ben.” Here he sometimes met Shakespeare. He wrote “Drink to me with thine eyes,” &c., at this famous resort. Child & Co. have with characteristic conservativeness preserved many very interesting relics of these three historical houses. They have the original sign of the Marygold and Sun, made of oak, stained green, with gilt border, with the motto “Ainsi mon ame,” now put up over the door between the front and back office, and retain it on the water-mark of their cheques, &c.

The old passageways of the Sugar Loaf, with their wooden hat pegs, the old dining rooms, kitchens and larders, with their wooden meat hooks, are preserved as they were two and three centuries ago. In one of the rooms over the old kitchen may be seen the bust of Apollo, and the tablet on which the lines of welcome to the Apollo Room, by Ben Jonson, are engraved in gold letters. Those were on the chimney piece of the great room. When Sir Christopher Wren rebuilt Temple Bar, in 1668, Child & Co. rented the chambers over the arcade adjoining their premises, of the city of London, at a yearly rental of £20, which they used as a sort of muniment room for the safe keeping of their old papers and books of accounts, until the excavations for the foundations of the new Inner Courts of Law, in 1875, caused Temple Bar to settle so much that, in 1877, the city gave them notice to vacate on "next midsummer's day;" what a notice to give and receive: a notice to quit forever premises filled with the familiar associations and the daily records of one's ancestors for centuries! The widening of Fleet street demanded for public convenience the demolition of the time-honored banking house, and the erection of another, one door east, covering the site of Child's place, anciently that of the "Old Devil," to which the firm moved on next bank holiday, April 15, 1879. They are still on ancestral ground. Among the many interesting pre-Elizabethan relics found in excavating the foundations of Sugar Loaf and the Old Devil taverns, in 1878, the most curious is an ancient flagon, filled with a ruby wine, intact, the glass of which has been oxidized into iridescent colors by contact with the earth for centuries.

During a larger part of their tenancy the heads or quarters of those who suffered for political offences were exposed upon Temple Bar, directly opposite the windows of the bank. It sometimes happened that the bankers were obliged to look daily upon the ghastly features of a former friend and client for long years after the procurator of the crown had covered in to the public treasury the forfeited balances of their accounts. Dickens characteristically described Child & Co. under the pseudonym of Tellson & Co., as they were in the days of the French revolution. Up to that time crimes against property, theft, forgery, false coining, the unauthorized opening of a letter, were punished by death. He says "that their bank had taken so many lives in its day, that if the heads laid low by it had been ranged on Temple Bar, they would probably have excluded what little light the ground floor had in a rather significant manner." He hardly exaggerates when he says: "The house was founded a hundred and fifty years previously," or caricatures in saying, "their bank by Temple Bar was an old-fashioned place, even in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty. It was very small, very dark, very ugly, very in commodious. It was an old-fashioned place, moreover in the moral attribute that the partners in the house were proud of smallness, proud of its darkness, proud of its ugliness, proud of its incommodiousness. They were even boastful of its eminence in those particulars, and were fired by an express conviction that if it were less objectionable, it would be less respectable. This was no passive belief, but an active weapon which they flashed at more convenient places of business. Tellson's (they said) wanted no elbow-room, Tellson's wanted no light, Tellson's wanted no embellishment. Noakes and Co.'s might, or Snooks Bros. might; but Tellson's, thank Heaven!—

"Any one of these partners would have disinherited his son on the question of rebuilding Tellson's. In this respect the house was much on a par with the Country; which did very often disinherit its sons for suggesting improvements in laws and customs that had long been highly objectionable, but were only the more respectable.

"Thus it had come to pass, that Tellson's was the triumphant perfection of inconvenience. After bursting open a door of idiotic obstinacy with a weak rattle in its throat, you fell into Tellson's down two steps, and came to your senses in a miserable little shop, with two little counters, where the oldest of men made your cheek shake as if the wind rustled it, while they examined the signature by the dingiest of windows, which were always under a shower-bath of mud from Fleet street, and which were made the dingier by their own iron bars proper, and the heavy shadow of Temple Bar. If your business necessitated your seeing 'the House,' you were put into a species of Condemned Hold at the back, where you meditated on a misspent life, until the House came with its hands in its pockets, and you could hardly blink at it in the dismal twilight. Your money came out of, or went into, wormy old wooden drawers, particles of which flew up your nose and down your throat when they were opened and shut. Your bank notes had a musty odor, as if they were fast decomposing into rags again. Your plate was stowed away among the neighboring cesspools, and evil communications corrupted its good polish in a day or two. Your deeds got into extemporized strong rooms made of kitchens and sculleries, and fretted all the fat out of their parchments into the banking house air. Your lighter boxes of family papers went up stairs into a Barmecide room, that always had a great dining table in it and never had a dinner, and where, even in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty, the first letters written to you by your old love, or by your little children, were but newly released from the horror of being ogled through the windows, by the heads exposed on Temple Bar with an insensate brutality and ferocity worthy of Abyssinia or Ashantee.

"Cramped in all kinds of dim cupboards and hatches at Tellson's, the oldest of men carried on the business gravely. When they took a young man into Tellson's London House they hid him somewhere till he was old. They kept him in a dark place, like a cheese, until he had the full Tellson flavor and blue-mould upon him. Then only was he permitted to be seen, spectacularly poring over large books, and casting his breeches and gaiters into the general weight of the establishment."

Child & Co. had a branch house in Paris, with the accounts of the noblesse which were transferred to London during the revolution, together with their valuables, to be used to eke out a miserable existence, or to be settled sans compté rendu par Les Etats executifs, the guillotine.

The Marygold became the headquarters of the Emigrés during the reign of terror, and its secret couriers were constantly passing between the two cities. So great was the crowd anxious to get the latest news from Paris, that bulletins were posted in its windows giving the names of the daily victims of the guillotine.

The banking firm retain many old time usages, probably inherited from their ancestors, the goldsmiths. They call their front office "the shop," and that in the rear, where the ledgers are kept, "the counting house," where they "cast up the shop" once a year. Use cheques written (never printed) on paper bearing their trade-mark, the Marygold, in its water mark. They adhere to the good old fashioned rule now too little practiced, of advancing their clerks by seniority and merit, and eventually admitting them as partners.

The firm has usually consisted of a head and five or six active partners, restricted, as a rule, to one of a family at a time, but open to hereditary succession, other things being equal. A member of the Child family has always succeeded to the first position, and the gaps made by time among other partners have been filled from the well seasoned stock of head clerks, selected in the sapling and carefully bred in the soil favorable to the best growth. This selection and survival of the fittest, together with inherited conservativeness, seems to have been favorable to longevity. Eight head partners of four generations, presided from 1663 to 1867. The last was of the fourth from the first Sir Francis Child, while he was of the sixth generation from his contemporary, Vere Fane, third Earl of Westmoreland, who opened an account with their bank in 1678. During these two centuries there were about fifty active partners, with an average tenure of about thirty years, and nearly as many more as clerks. There were three John Wormalds, father, son and grandson, partners in the firm collectively eighty-nine years, and clerks ninety-four years. The last died in 1874, having been taken ill on the sixtieth anniversary of the day he began his apprenticeship. Ralph and George Addison averaged about the same time as partners, and Robert Dent was a partner forty-three years.

The exceptional prosperity and continuity of this banking firm is largely due to the wisdom and forethought with which the first Sir Francis Child laid its broad foundations. The consensus that he evolved and the remarkable clauses that he inserted in his will, together with their innate conservativeness, have enabled his descendants to conduct a large and increasing business successfully through the perturbations of two centuries and more. This is probably an unique instance of a vocation having descended from one generation to the next, without a consanguinal break, in the same building, for more than two hundred years!

"Within that time how many an empire hoar
And young republic flushed with wealth and war Alike hath changed the ermine for the shroud."

The first Sir Francis Child was a careful, shrewd man of affairs, conservative in many things, but the originator of many of the maxims and forms of modern banking. That he was a man of little political or religious bias, is shown by his popularity with men differing widely on these subjects. His old ledgers show that he had the accounts of Oliver Cromwell, Charles II., his queen, his mother, his ministers, his mistresses, his natural sons, the Dukes of Richmond and Monmouth, his brother, James II., William and Mary, and the leading men of their several reigns. The Middlesex and London Archaeological Society published a list, in 1875, of some scores of noblemen and leading men who opened accounts with his bank previous to 1700, whose descendants are still keeping their bank accounts there. Among the many valuable autographs and relics preserved in the bank is a cheque drawn by the Duke of Bolton to the order of, and endorsed by the notorious Titus Oats: one signed "Ellen X Gwin," a bond signed by four dukes and earls agreeing to pay her indebtedness to the firm, by overdrawing her account £6,000, after deducting her plate, 14,400 ounces turned in; Dr. Hurrell's receipt "in full for all remedies and medicines delivered to Miss Ellen Gwin, deceased," dated 1699, twelve years after her exit: a cheque for £200, payable "upon producing and delivering to them, the King's pardon to James Hooper for high treason;" an autograph note of the Duke of Leeds, dated 1694, praying "his very good friend, Sir Francis Child, goldsmith, neare Temple Bar," "to subscribe four thousand pounds for mee to the stock of the Bank of England," then forming: a school receipt dated 1685, for £2.18.5 tuition for his sons Robert and John at a private school, which small sum includes their books, "a Cato and Corderius, a Horace, a Livy, a Cornelius Nepos, and a French master:" another for £2.5.10 for John, including the above and "dinners for ten weeks less five holidays." His son James' bill for 1702, including "books, light, fire, coach hire, pocket money, gloves, mending clothes, cutting hair, tuition, pole money, and full board for six months" was £12.2.6; another, including all the above and "the board and expenses of a private tutor, writing, French and dancing masters, powder, oyl and church dues," £23.16.8.

There is a spirited caricature by Hogarth, extant, of the Duchess of Marlboro' as she appeared at the bank, Temple Bar, followed by porters carrying the most remarkable articles of silver and gold plate which she had hastily collected, on hearing of a threatened run on Child's bank, to tide them over. During a panic in 1663, Pepys\(^5\) says: "I cannot have my two hundred pieces of gold again for silver, all being bought up last night that were to be had, and sold for twenty-four and twenty-five shillings, so I must keep my silver by me." Forgetting that similar acts had brought the "grey crowned head" of his father to the block, Charles II. treacherously closed the exchequer in 1672, entailing ruin, bankruptcy and want upon all classes, especially the goldsmiths, who had large amounts deposited there, and among them Alderman Backwell, of "the Grasshopper," Lombard street, to whom the Crown owed £296,000. After great distress, the King issued six per cent. annuity bonds to Backwell and others, but repudiated them before any interest was paid, and Backwell died in prison. After many years, William III. reinstated those debts which Charles' prodigality had caused, and this was the beginning of the present public debt of England. A late number of the British Review naively remarks, that "Barbara Villiers was the foundation of this public debt."

After Alderman Backwell's failure, his son married a daughter of Sir Francis Child, and became a partner in that bank, taking his books and valuable accounts with him, many of which are still on their books. "Sir Francis acted as messenger and banker of the lottery of Prince Rupert's jewels, valued at £20,000, at which the King himself took part, counting out the tickets among the lords and ladies." There was much jealousy and rivalry between Child & Co. and the Bank of England. Previous to the establishment of the latter, the former had found it popular and lucrative to issue notes of circulation, which privilege the bank's charter took from them, within sixty-five miles of London. They then put their certificates of deposit into circulation, which soon commanded a premium, while the notes of the bank were at a discount. Stung by this, and to retaliate, the bank secretly bought up a large amount of their certificates, hoping to break Child & Co. by presenting them all at once. Hearing of this, the latter applied to their sure friend, the Duchess of Marlboro', who loaned them £700,000 in a single cheque on the Bank of England. Holding this until the certificates were presented, a preconcerted signal caused a clerk to draw the bills for it, and return with them long before the cool headed banker had summed up the total of the certificates, when he paid them off with the bills. He was able to buy them the next day (to pay the Duchess back), at a large discount.

Some time after this, Sir Francis attempted to break the bank, by refusing publicly to receive its notes; not succeeding in this, he essayed to effect it by their own device, quietly collecting £100,000 of their bills and demanding their redemption; they tided over this by paying out only sixpences, discounting, and keeping their counters thronged by their own servants, who returned the silver privately to the bank after drawing it.

Sir Francis was arraigned in parliament, of which he was then a member, for injuring the government and helping its enemies, by trying to break the Bank of England. He curried it off with a high hand, saying every "tub must stand on its own bottom," or fall. This rivalry and warfare was kept up for half a century, and long after the first and second Sir Francis were dead. In the year (1745) that the Stewarts made their last, most brilliant, and almost successful attempt to recover the crown of their ancestor, under the guidance of the youthful and comely Charles Edward, the notes of the Bank of England were at a fearful discount. "The directors, alarmed at the great depreciation of their paper, and attributing it to the high estimation in which the house of Child & Co. still remained, attempted, by very unfair artifices, to ruin their reputation." But like that of the Pretender, the assault ended in strengthening the assaulted. Smiles says that when the Duke of Bridgewater became embarrassed in the construction of his great canal, in 1760, "taking the road to the city on horseback, attended only by his groom, to try what could be done with his London bankers, Child & Co., Temple Bar, then the principal banking house in the metropolis, as it is the oldest, and where most of the aristocratic families kept their accounts." He effected a loan on hypothecating the revenues of the canal, that enabled him to complete it.

The first Sir Francis Child was a man of great executive ability, public spirit, and benevolence. Besides conducting his business through four rather panic years, with much sagacity and success, discounting revolutions, holding the "sinews" and patronage of whig or tory alike, he held respectively the offices of alderman, high sheriff, colonel of the honorable artillery company, and lord mayor of London. He represented the city in Queen Anne's first parliament, and was president and 1705. This ward was rebuilt at the sole charge of Sir Francis Child, Knt., some time lord mayor, and now president of this house." 5 Full length portraits of Sir Francis, and his son Sir Francis, who was also president of the institution and lord mayor of London, adorn the centre of the great hall, opposite to the fine portrait of its founder, Edward VI. 6

Sir Francis purchased the magnificent estate, Osterly House, in 1711, but died, two years later, without occupying it, in a mansion which he built, called East End House. The "Beauties of England and Wales" has a fine view of Osterly House.
Sir Francis had three brothers: Daniel, who lived with him, at Parson's Green; Edward, who lived at Burghley, and John, at Devizes, and twelve sons and three daughters. Sir Robert, Sir Francis and Sir Samuel succeeded their father puri-passu as heads of the banking house. Stephen Child founded a separate banking house previous to 1713, under the name of Stephen Child & Co., which has been doing business ever since at the "Crown,
" near Pope's Head Alley, under varying titles, but as Willis, Percival & Co. for several generations, and has had dealings and an open account with Child & Co. for one hundred and sixty-six years, as shown by their books. 7 John was a clerk in his father's bank, where the following undertaker's bill is still preserved:
"For the burial of John Child of the Marygold, Esq., in the vault of the Temple Church, February, 1702," total, £6.10.00 of which the principal items are "for candles for the church, £0.2.6;" "for the six bearers in gowns, £2.0.0." George was in holy orders; Thomas a merchant; James and William died early, and were buried in Falham churchyard, with their father and sister Martha, who married A. Collins; Jane died young, and Elizabeth married Tyrringham Backwell, who became a partner in Child's bank, as did his two sons, Barnaby and William;
what became of Leonard and the other two sons, is not known.
The eldest son, Robert, as has been said, succeeded his father as head of the firm; he was also alderman, and colonel of the honorable artillery company, and was one of the four citizens knighted by George I. on his accession, in 1714, in compliment to the city of London," "yet he paid, according to his cash book of 25th September, "£86.11.6 for the honor of knighthood." He was the first of the family who resided at Osterly, where he died without issue, in 1721, and where his portrait, by Michael Dahl, can be seen. His next brother, Francis, alderman 1721, high sheriff 1722, lord mayor and baronet 1732, president Christ Hospital, or "blue coat school" 1727-1740; member of parliament for the city, and director in the East India Company, lived at Osterly, to which he added Northall, in 1726, at a cost of £19,501, and died there, in 1740. Full length portraits of himself and his father, both in the robes of lord mayor, may be seen there."

He was succeeded as head of the bank and at Osterly by his younger brother, Sir Samuel Child, baronet and member of parliament. He lived in Lincoln's Inn Field, and married Miss Agatha Edgar, by whom he had two sons, Francis and Robert, and a daughter. There is a beautiful group of these three children at Osterly, by Dandridge, and also of Sir Samuel and Lady Child, by I. Vanderbank. Sir Samuel was succeeded as head of the firm at his death, in 1752, by his widow, Mrs. Agatha Child, until her decease in 1763, when her eldest son, Francis, took her place. He, however, died the same year, leaving two of his partners, Devon and Lovelace, £20,000 each, and £20 each to their seven clerks for mourning. It is remarkable that, under the good old rule of the house, all these seven clerks became partners in the firm within the next twenty-seven years, the youngest reaching that goal in 1790. Francis Child was a man of cultivated taste and refined discrimination. He expended large sums in rebuilding Osterley House in 1760, preserving the ancient ground plan generally, but covering the square court in front by a spacious portico, and changing Osterley chapel, where the beautiful Anne Waller was married to Sir Philip Harcourt, in 1661, into the present servants' hall. He purchased a fine painting, by Rubens, in Holland; which ornaments the grand staircase; subject. "The Apotheosis of William I., Prince of Orange."

Osterley Manor, according to Lyson, was a fine old place in Edward First's reign, in the thirteenth century. Having belonged to the convents of Sheen and of Sion, it reverted to the Crown on the suppression of the monasteries, and was granted successively to the Marquis of Exeter and the Duke of Somerset, and was forfeited by both on their attainders. Coming into the possession of Sir Thomas Gresham, the founder of the Royal Exchange, he enclosed the park, rebuilt the Manor House, and entertained Queen Elizabeth there in 1578 most sumptuously. The Queen having remarked that the great court "would look handsomer if divided by a wall in the centre," Sir Thomas, when the Queen retired for the night, procured workmen from London and had the wall built before she rose in the morning. Result, a pun, that it was "no wonder that a man who could build a 'Change could change a building." Like unto "rain water sherry," one wonders how such a weak pun could have been preserved so long.

Osterley House stands in the centre of a fine park of three hundred and fifty acres. It is 140 by 117 feet. "The interior, which is fitted up with great taste and magnificence, was finished by Robert Child, who succeeded to his brother Francis' estates in 1763." The most remarkable of the rooms are a noble gallery, 130 feet in height, (sic) containing a good collection of pictures by the old masters, and some valuable portraits. "The state bedroom, very magnificently furnished, and a dining room hung with beautiful tapestry, procured at a great expense from the Gobelins manufactory in 1775." "The library contains a large and most valuable collection of books, of which there is a printed catalogue, drawn up by Dr. Morell, in 1771."

Robert Child succeeded his brother as head of the firm, and amassed the largest private fortune of the eighteenth century. He sold his house in Lincoln's Inn Field, and purchased that of the Duke of Manchester, in Berkley square, in 1767, for £10,500. This is still the town residence of the family. With all his magnificent expenditures, he was a close, penurious man. He once asked Sheridan, who lived neighbor at Osterley, to write him a sermon. He took for his text, "A Rich Man," and described his neighbor's (the banker's) characteristic foibles so accurately, that it was patent to every one whom the subject of the discourse was intended for. He married Sarah, daughter of Gilbert and Mary (Craddock) Iodrell, of Ankerwicke Priory.7 (This Priory, on the banks of the Thames, was the refuge of King John the night before he was compelled to sign Magna-Charta of Runnymede.) Their only child, Sarah Anne, eloped from her father's house in Berkley square on the night of the 17th January, 1782, with John Fane, tenth Earl of Westmoreland, causing a great sensation at the time. Her father took post-chaise and pressed the lovers so closely in Northamptonshire, "that the Earl was obliged to stand up in his carriage and shoot the leading horse of the pursuers, capsizing the vehicle, thereby causing a delay that enabled the lovers to reach Gretna Green and be married by the blacksmith before the father arrived."8 The incensed father never forgave his daughter, but disinherited her and debarred her right of succession to the firm, bequeathing that valuable right and his immense estates to her eldest daughter. He died within the year, when his widow, Mrs. Sarah Child, succeeded him as head of the firm. She subsequently married Lord Ducie, who signed the balance sheet with her on the "casting up of the shop," in 1791, and receipted for her at her death, in 1793, from which time to the majority of her granddaughter, Lady Sophia Child Fane, in 1806, the headship of the firm was held in abeyance for the first time.

Lady Ducie was an accomplished artist, and many of her paintings are to be found at Osterley, where she continued to live. There are to be seen there several paintings of her, and a joint one of her as Lady Ducie and her daughter, the Countess of Westmoreland; and also several of Robert Child; one by Romney, which is considered his best work. He is commemorated by a fine monument of white marble in the south chancel of Heston Church, near Osterley, designed by Adams, architect.

The Earl of Westmoreland was of the fifth generation from Vere Fane 3d Earl, who opened an account with his contemporary, the first Sir Francis, in 1678, which account he still kept open. He was dining with Robert Child at the bank, Temple Bar, a few days before the elopement, when he asked the banker confidentially what he would do "if he was in love with a girl, whose parents, he had good reason for believing, would not consent to the marriage," and was answered, "run away with her, of course," the banker little thinking that "the girl" was his own daughter. She had one son, John, the eleventh Earl, who married Priscilla Ann Wellesley, niece of the great Duke of Wellington, and sister of the fifth Earl of Mornington, who married Catherine, daughter of Sir James Tylney Long, and great granddaughter of Sir Josiah Child, and three daughters, the second of whom married Earl Morey, and for her second husband Sir Arthur Paget; and the third married the Earl of Bessborough. The eldest daughter, Lady Sophia Child Fane, became the head of the firm of Child & Co. at her majority, March, 4, 1806. When they "cast up the shop," as they still term it, the head of the firm visits their counting house, examines and signs the "balance sheet," concurrently with all the partners, and afterwards dines with them in the old Sugar Loaf dining room, up one flight of stairs, at the Marygold.

On the occasion of Lady Sophia's assuming her hereditary position at the head of the table and firm, a full-length portrait of her, by Sir Thomas Laurence, was placed over the Elizabethan chimney piece of the old dining room, where it has since remained, and the old-time day of reckoning changed from October 3d to March 4th, in honor of her birthday. This slip of Gretna Green proved of thoroughbred tissue. She presided longest of any of her blood—sixty-one years. She became a reigning beauty of the Court of George IV., "succeeded by bequest to the immense fortune of her grandfather, Robert Child, and married George Villiers, fifth Earl of Jersey, who was twice lord chamberlain of George IV., and twice master of horse to Victoria." He was enabled, by act of parliament, to assume the additional arms and surname of Child, in 1812. He died in 1859. Issue: George Augustus Frederick Child-Villiers, sixth Earl of Jersey; Augustus John, who married a daughter of Viscount Keith; F. W. Child-Villiers, who married a sister of the Earl of Athlone: Francis and three daughters, one of whom married Prince Esterhazy. George, sixth Earl, married a daughter of the late Sir Robert Peel, and predeceased his mother, who was succeeded as head of the firm, at her death in 1867, by his eldest son, Victor Albert George Villiers-Child, seventh Earl of Jersey, who married a daughter of Lord Leigh, of Stone Leigh, and has a son, Henry George Child-Villiers, born 1873, who is heir-apparent to his father’s position as head of the family and Child & Co.’s bank. The present Earl was born in 1845, educated at Eton and Oxford; is Baron Hoo and Viscount Grandison, Magistrate for Oxen, Lord of Middleton Park, Bicester, and Osterley Park, Hounslow, where he has country seats, and resides in Berkley square, city. He is a direct descendant of several noble families, who opened accounts with his great ancestor, Sir Francis Child, previous to 1700, and of Edward Villiers, Governor of Ireland, father of the beautiful Barbara Villiers, mistress of Charles II., Duchess of Cleveland, Countess of Castlemaine, who kept an account with Child & Co., and whose autograph cheque that firm still hold, beginning, “Pray paye Fifty Ginneys to berer,” dated 1689, and of the lineage of the Earls of Bridgewater, Derby, Cumberland, descendants of the Duke of Suffolk, who married Mary, sister of Henry VIII., through whom he has the right to quarter the royal arms.

If any apology is due for the prominence given to the commercial relations of the family herein imperfectly sketched, it may be found in the fact that it was eminently a commercial family: that its members were potent factors in the establishment of an important commercial colony, now grown to be a great political empire, with hundreds of millions of subjects, and the founders and are the managers of the first and now the oldest bank among English-speaking people: that these relations have been the prime source of wealth and eminence, and are so interwoven with its history that if less accentuated this article would have been more imperfect.

Note.—The writer of the above sketch is indebted for many of the incidents of the family and bank to an article thereon written by a present member of the firm of Child & Co., F. Hilton Price, and published in the proceedings of the London and Middlesex Archaeological Society, for 1875.

Addison Child.
Some fragmentary items of various persons of the name are herewith given. One is a metrical account of an affaire de coeur, published some years ago in England, which I found in the "Book of Days." In the same book was found the item in regard to Lady Child. These are of an amusing character.

In 1750, Charles Baldwin married a daughter of Sir William Lacon Childe, and assumed the name and arms of Childe. Their present representative is William Lacon Childe, of Shropshire. Symonds' Diary says that, "Charles I. encamped at Childley, an ancient house near Oxford; also at Childton, near Hungerford, in 1644, and in 1645 at Child's, Wickham, Glos'tershire.

John Child was in the secret service of Charles II. and James II., and was sent by the latter to St. Christopher's as chaplain, in 1685. He may have been the son of Sir Francis Child of London, who died in 1703.

Rowland Davis speaks of William of Orange lodging at Child's house at Cullen, near Tipperary, Ireland, in 1690.

From the Book of Days we quote: "Dr. Plott in his Natural History of Shropshire, 1686, gives many instances of centenarians of his time." After citing some of these, he says: "This is much the same that Zuingerus reports of a noble matron of the family of Dolburger, the archbishop of Mentz, who could thus speak to her daughter:

"(1) Mater ait (2) natur, Die (3) natur, Filia, (4) natam Ut moreat, (5) natur flangere (6), filiolam!"

That is, the "Mother said to her daughter, daughter, bid thy daughter tell her daughter that her daughter's daughter cries!" He adduces as proof how far this case is from being difficult of belief, that a Lady Child of Shropshire, being married at twelve, her first child was born before she was complete thirteen; this being repeated in the second generation, Lady Child found herself a grandmother at twenty-seven. At the same rate she might have been a beldam at sixty-six, and had she reached one hundred and twenty, as has been done by others, it was possible that nine generations might have existed together." It will be found that Lady Child of Shropshire, is not the only matron in the Child family at the age of

twelve, as Benjamin Child, son of the emigrant of that name, married Grace Morris when she was only twelve. 1

In this same Book of Days we find an extract from "The Berkshire Lady's Garland:" "March 29th, 1679, is the date of a baronetcy conferred on a Berkshire gentleman, William Kenrick of Whitley, which, however, expired with the second generation, about the close of the century. The second baronet left his property to an only daughter, who is understood to have soon after disposed of herself in marriage, in a very extraordinary manner. Tradition and a contemporary broadside ballad concur in representing this young gentlewoman as paid court to by many, but refusing all, and keeping herself disengaged, until attending a wedding at Reading, she met a young and handsome, but poor, attorney, named Benjamin Child, with whom she fell violently in love on the spot. For some days she reasoned with herself on the subject, trying to shake herself free of this sudden passion, but all in vain. Then feeling that something must be done, but unable, from confusion of mind, to devise a proper course, she took the extraordinary course of sending the young man a letter, demanding satisfaction for injuries she alleged he had inflicted on her, and appointing time and place for a hostile meeting. Mr. Child was much surprised, and quite at a loss to conceive who the challenger could be. By the advice of a friend, however, he resolved to attend. The meeting may be described in the words of the ballad:

"Early on a summer's morning,
When bright Phoebus was adorning
Every bower with his beams,
The fair lady came, it seems.

At the bottom of a mountain,
Near a pleasant crystal fountain,
There she left her gilded coach,
While the grove she did approach.

Covered with her mask and walking,
There she met her lover, talking—
With a friend that he had brought.
So she asked him whom he sought."

"I am challenged by a gallant Who resolves to try my talent,
Who he is I cannot say,
But I hope to show him play."

"It is I that did invite you:
You shall wed me, or I'll fight you

1 An error, as later record proves.
Underneath these spreading trees;
Therefore choose from which you please.

You shall find I do not vapour;
I have sought my trusty rapier;
Therefore take your choice,” said she:

“Either fight, or marry me!”

Said he, “Madam, pray what mean you?
In my life I’ve never seen you;
Pray unmask, your visage shew
Then I’ll tell you aye or no.”

“I will not my face uncover Till the marriage ties are over;
Therefore choose you which you will,
Wed me, sir, or try your skill.

Step within that pleasant bower
With your friend one single hour;
Strive your thoughts to reconcile,
And I’ll wander here the while.”

While the beauteous lady waited,
The young bachelor debated
What was best for to be done,
Quoth his friend, “The hazard run.

If my judgment can be trusted,
Wed her first, you can’t be worsted:
If she’s rich, you’ll rise to fame,
If she’s poor, why you’re the same.”

He consented to be married;
All three in a coach were carried
To a church without delay,
Where he weds the lady gay.

Though sweet pretty cupids hovered Round her eyes, her face was covered With a mask,—he took her thus,
Just “for better or for worse.”

Now he clothed in rich attire,
Not inferior to a Squire;
Beauty, honor, riches’ store,
What can man desire more?

The ballad goes on to state that the pair went in her coach to the lady’s elegant mansion, where leaving him in a parlor, she retired to dress herself in her finest attire, and by-and-by broke upon his vision, as a young and handsome woman, and his devoted wife.

It appears that Mr. Child took a position in society suitable to the fortune thus conferred upon him, and was high sheriff of the county, in 1714.92

Of the Coat of Arms.

That a Coat of Arms should be represented in the Genealogy of a family long residing in a republic, may to some seem incongruous; indeed we have in our intercourse with this widespread household, found those who have expressed more than indifference to this matter. Those who think highly of such memorials, will not need the following resume of the original use of such heraldic devices, but we believe we can make it apparent that if we are truly entitled to cherish these favors long ago conferred upon some unknown ancestor, we shall find all, eager for their preservation. I shall therefore make extracts from Burke, and DeBrete, (indisputable and well known authorities on such matters,) and from a very admirable little compilation, by Hugh Clarke, entitled "Introduction to Heraldry:"

"Heraldic devices, truly so called, make their first appearance in Europe in the middle of the twelfth century, and about one hundred years later we find Heraldry a science in high repute, without being able to trace its intermediate progress, or discover the names of those who first laid down its laws, or subsequently promulgated them. The earliest Heraldic document of which even a copy has come down to us is a Roll of Arms, that is, a catalogue of armorial bearings of the Kings of England, and the principal barons, knights, &c., in the reign of Henry Third, and from internal evidence, supposed to have been compiled between the years 1240 and 1245." In the reign of Henry Third armorial ensigns became hereditary, marks of cadency distinguishing various members of a family.

The use of arms at that period was to distinguish persons and property, and record descent and alliance, and no modern invention has been found to supersede it. Only the members of a particular family can lawfully bear certain armorial ensigns, and the various branches of that family have their separate differences to distinguish one from the other.
The shield, or escutcheon. (from the Latin word scutum, a hide, of which shields are supposed to have been originally made.) represents the defensive implement of that name used in war, and on which armorial ensigns were originally borne. The ground, or surface, is called a field, and here are depicted the figures which make up the coat of arms. The position of these different figures mark the distinct and different arms.

Crests were anciently marks of great honor, because they were worn only by heroes of great valor and high rank, that they might be the better distinguished in an engagement: and thereby rally their men if dispersed. Crests appear on the helmets of knights as early as the thirteenth century; and after the institution of the Order of the Garter, and in imitation of Edward III., who was the first King of England that bore a crest on his helmet, all knights companions of the Order began to wear crests. This practice soon became more general, until at length they were assumed at discretion, by all who considered themselves entitled to bear arms. They are at present considered mere ornaments. The crest is the highest part of the ornaments of a coat of arms, and is placed upon a wreath, unless it is issuant from a coronet, or standing on a chapeau. In the middle ages, no man who was under the degree of knight had his crest on a wreath, which is composed of two rolls of silk twisted together, and of the color or metal of the arms.

Mottoes are not always hereditary, and have been changed, varied, and relinquished at the pleasure of the bearer. As many now in use have been originally war cries, and most are presumably associated with some deed of prowess or noble aspiration, it would seem desirable to retain those handed down.

Arms are divided into eleven classes: 1st. Arms of Dominion, such as kings and emperors bear constantly on coins, standards, seals, etc. 2d. Arms of Pretension, as the quartering of the arms of France with those of England, until 1801. 3d. Arms of Community, as those of bishoprics, cities, universities, etc. 4th. Arms of Assumption, formerly allowed when one captured a prisoner of higher rank than himself, he took his arms. 5th. Arms of Patronage, such as governors of provinces, patrons of benefices, add to their family arms. 6th. Arms of Succession, taken by those who inherit lands, manors, &c., by will, entail, and donation, and which they add to their own.
OF THE COAT OF ARMS.

7th. Arms of Alliance, as when heiresses marry into families, are taken by their issue, to show their descent, paternal and maternal. 8th. Arms of Adoption, like arms of succession, called “of adoption” because the last of a family may, by will, adopt a stranger to possess his name, estate, and arms. 9th. Arms Paternal and Hereditary, such as are transmitted from the first possessor to his son, grandson, and succeeding generations. 10th. Arms of Concession, are augmentations granted by the sovereign, of part of his ensigns, or regalia, to such persons as he pleaseth to honor therewith. 11th. Canting or Allusive Arms, are coats of arms whose figures allude to the names, professions, &c., of the bearer, as three herrings for Herr, a camel for Camel, three covered cups for Butler, a pine tree for Pine, etc. Such arms have been mistakenly supposed by some to be of an inferior order, whereas there can scarcely be greater proof of their antiquity, and highly honorable character.

There are other distinctive marks attached to arms to mark the different sons of a house, and descent therefrom: the duplication or combination of these distinguishing figures carries on the ratio and line of descent. There are nine of these defining figures; that of the eldest son is of this form \[\text{---}\] and is termed a label; the second is a crescent: \[\bigcirc\] the third is called a mullet; \[\bigstar\] the fourth a martlett (or small martin). We give the marks of distinction so far, for a reason apparent farther on. We think what we have quoted from these authorities will be a sufficient explanation of the desire, if we may lawfully do so, to hold as a memento of past worth, a coat of arms.

We have found in the American families, what may be called three coats of arms, or more strictly, two. One bears upon its field three doves, the motto being “Imitari Quam Invidere.”\(^{92}\) The other has three eagles, in the same positions, with the same crest, and motto; the third is a variation of the second, in having in its centre a small shield with a martlett, indicating the bearer to be the fourth son of the first house. Had the researches prosecuted years since through Mr. Horatio G. Somerby, and later by some members of the family, succeeded in establishing the line from which the American families are descended, we could doubtless know with measurable certainty to which we were entitled. Failing this, we give the grounds upon which we base our decision, and preface, with the fact that about the time of the Revolution, and later, a John Cole and his son made it their business to furnish families who desired them, coats of arms; these were not wholly plagiarisms, as they generally, if not always, gave those which were borne by some family of the same name in Great Britain. Later research has shown many of these works to be spurious.

The great grandfather of the compiler of this book, Mr. Henry Child of Woodstock, Ct., built in the years 1761-2 a large and commodious house for his family, and as it stood upon a principal thoroughfare, and removed from the town, he opened therein an Inn, and hung out for his Inn-sign a transcript of a coat of arms; this sign, now in preservation (though it ceased to swing out its welcome to the wayfarer many years ago), bears unmistakably the doves, and an octogenarian relative tells us, that "it was always called the family coat of arms, and the figures were meant for doves." Rev. Dr. Willard Child (my uncle) found some years since, in the old homestead, a torn copy of a coat of arms, upon which the figures are evidently doves. These escape the condemnation of Cole's manufactures, as they antedate his operations. We shall farther on give the coat of arms of an English family, resident in that county of England in which the New England emigrants have been thought to have originated, bearing doves, upon its field.

Indeed we have found copies of a coat of arms in several families and lines. Among the descendants of Edward and Margaret Weld Child are found two copies alike in main points, but with some slight variations. In the Watertown branch, in the family of Ephraim Child, Jr., of Rutland, and West Boylston, Mass. In the Barnstable branch in the family of Dr. Timothy Childs; and in a family of one of the southern branches.

Mr. Addison Child, who has aided us much in furnishing the scholarly articles over his signature, has given much thought to this matter, and we have, upon consultation with him, accepted his view, which we thus sum up.

The percentage of families bearing the arms with the eagles upon the field is so very much the larger, that any other form is but an occasional exception, therefore, presumably the coat of arms of the family would bear the eagles. 2d. Each advance we have made in establishing a link between the American and English families has pointed more and more strongly towards a family bearing the eagles upon their arms, circumstantially indicating a kinship with Richard Child, father of Sir John and Sir Josiah Child, whose notable careers are so graphically outlined for us. Sir Josiah Child had Arms "Gules, a chevron engrailed ermine, between three eagles close argent. Crest, an eagle wings expanded argent enveloped with a snake proper." Motto "Imitari Quam Invidere."

Sir John Child had Arms, "Vert two bars engrailed, between three leopard's faces or. Crest a leopard's face or, between two laurel branches proper." Motto, "Spes Alit." We do not know when he took these Arms, but his baronetcy was conferred upon him in 1684, while he was resident in the East Indies. He might then have adopted the leopard's faces, as the leopard was a frequent enemy, and some deed of prowess may easily have led to this assumption, always such arms are regarded as most honorable. His title became extinct in 1753, and his Arms are not at present borne by any of the name, or others quartering the Child arms with their own.

As some persons have a deep interest in armorial bearings, we give a condensed and abbreviated summary of facts on this point, gathered in our exhaustive search in the best collections of Heraldic lore available in America. In Burke's "General Armory of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales," we found eighteen families of the name, with their arms, &c; with eight the motto was given, and five had, "Imitari Quam Invideri."

In Berry's "Encyclopedia Heraldic and Dictionary of Heraldry," of eleven families Child, we find but one marked difference in the arms: "Ermine on a chief indented gules, three escallops or." Of the larger number the Arms are "Gules, a chevron engrailed ermine, between three eagles close argent. Crest, an eagle, wings expanded or elevated argent enveloped with a snake proper." Motto "Imitari Quam Invideri." This is the coat of arms we present as that which we may accept with large confidence.

In the account by Burke of the family of the present Sir Smith Child, who was made baronet in 1868, we find his grandfather to have been "Admiral of the Blue," and that "he entered the navy in 1747, under Earl Gower's auspices, and eminently distinguished himself in the service. He commanded the 'Europe' in the two actions off the Chesapeake; subsequently, in 1795, he took command of the 'Commerce de Marseille,' one hundred and twenty (120) guns, and attained his flag in 1799." He may have been accompanied by his son, Smith Child, whom we find to have married Miss Elizabeth Parsons, daughter of Timothy Parsons, Esq., of Massachusetts, U. S. He died early, leaving one son, the present baronet.

The family of Child, Northwick, Worcestershire, (as found in the 38th edition of Burke's "Baronetage and Peerage of Great Britain,"”) have Arms, "Gules a fesse ermine, between three doves argent. Crest a dove, wings expanded argent, with a snake twining about her neck and body or."

Should any desire to have a copy of these arms blazoned to hang in their homes, we append herewith the proper tinctures or colors for the Child arms, in such terms as will be readily apprehended:

Shield _gules_ (or red) in the groundwork, _chevron_ white, _engrailed_ black, _ermine_ black, outlines of the shield gilt, _eagles_ _argent_ (or silver), the coils of the wreath alternate red and gilt, eagle silver, snake black. We give also a brief glossary of the heraldic terms used:

TINCTURES.

Or—Gold, or yellow.

Argent—Silver, or white.

Gules—Red.

Azure—Blue.

Sable—Black.

Vert—Green.

The _Chevron_ is formed of two lines placed in the form of a pyramid, and descending in form of a pair of compasses to the extremities of the shield.

The _Fesse_ is formed by two horizontal lines across the shield comprising the centre third part of the escutcheon, emblematic of the military girdle worn over the armor. The _Bar_, a diminutive of fesse.

Engrailed, ____ , _ermine_ sable spots on a white field, the tail terminating in three hairs; _ermínos_, black spots on gold field. Nebulee, ____ Indented ____ Cross _croslet_, is a cross crossed again at the extremities, at a small distance from each of the ends; cross croslet fitchée, so termed when the under limb of the cross ends in a sharp point.
American Families.

CHAPTER I.

1. Ephraim Child.

Could we give the parentage of this first emigrant, Ephraim Child, it would be exceedingly gratifying. Since prosecuting this work, we have learned that the same uncertainty as to the paternity of the emigrants, has perplexed the chronicler of other families, arising as we have said elsewhere from the necessity for a quiet embarkation. The difficulty of restoring these lost links may be more easily understood, when it is remembered that many of the early emigrants were led to come from the motherland for greater freedom in their religious faith, and often sailed from some minor port, and no list of passengers was made or desired. That this was true of our emigrating ancestry, we do not know, it may have been, as but few of the name are found on any preserved list. A Michael Child and Thomas Child sailed from London to Virginia, and in connection with their names it is stated that they took the oath of allegiance to the established church.

Ephraim Child, born in England in 1593, came to America in 1630, accompanied as seems probable by his nephew, Benjamin Child.

The marriage of Ephraim Child to a widow, the Mrs. Elizabeth Palmer, is recorded at Nayland, Suffolk county, England, on the 8th of February, 1625. Mrs. Palmer is presumed to be the daughter of Jonas Bond of Bury St. Edmunds, of the same county. Ephraim Child was admitted freeman May 18th, 1631, applied therefor the year previous.

By virtue of his seniority and prominence in colonial affairs, Ephraim Childs takes precedence in the Genealogy, though not generally believed to have left descendents to bear his name or retain his honors. He is known as the personal friend of Governor John Winthrop of Massachusetts, and from this circumstance may have arisen the impression that, like Gov. Winthrop, Mr. Child was a native of Suffolk county, England.

Mr. Ephraim Child occupied a leading position in Watertown, Massachusetts; a man of property, and piety, he was often chosen to places of trust and responsibility in town and county affairs; and held office in the church as one of the first deacons. For twelve years he is found a representative at the General Court, a post, then, bestowed only upon those of known integrity, mental power, and financial ability.

His judgment is also attested in his appointment by the County Court one of the Commissioners to "end small causes;" and from the esteem of his fellow-citizens he was elected one of the selectmen of the town for fifteen years.

His death occurred on the thirteenth of February 1663, when seventy years of age. His will dated, the tenth of November, 1662, is given as of interest, and from the fact that we gather therefrom certain clues to further record. Bond, one of our authorities, says, "the appraisal of his homestead and the amount of his inventory (£770 15) show that he was one of the most affluent of the settlers, and the distribution of his widow's wardrobe and furniture by her will, show that she had some of the elegancies as well as the comforts of life."

Will of Ephraim Child.

Novemb. 20th 1662. I give unto William Bond, father, forty acres of my Lands on the hither Plain, and I give unto Richard Child and John Child all the rest of that Land with all other lands abroad, namely, my remote meadow, my Farm any upon the further plain, with the land called Township-land, to the end that before my estate be broken, care and endeavour be used, either by improving or by sale, my Debts may be secured and all have their own, and withal my will is that there be twenty cord of Wood cut out every year if it be there for the use of my wife, so long as she lives. I give unto my dear and loving wife my dwelling house and Lott with all that appertains thereunto, also my Divident, Dorchester Field, and my meadow upon the other side of the river, with all my Goods and Chattels for her maintenance as long as she lives, and allow her Te—[obliterated] pounds of that Estate then in being to dispose of as she pleases pr de—[obliterated] being dead. My will is that Ephraim Child the son of Benjamin Child should inhabit my dwelling-house and Lott: with one half my Divident and Dorchester field, my coz. William Bond, the Father the other half of my Divident and the meadow upon the other side of the river, and the remainder of the Estate which then shall be, be equally divided, both Goods within (as nothing be defaced, but all that is nailed fast remain to the house) and all the Chattels abroad unto Richard Child, John Child, Ephraim Child, and William Bond above named. And to that end I do appoint my dear wife and my loving Coz, William Bond to be my executors.

I give unto my dearly beloved Pastour ten pounds, to Mary Rowles wife to John Parker a Cow with Clf. I give forty shilling a year forever to be paid out of my lands towards the maintenance of a Schoolmaster in Watertown. I give my servant David one Cow. bullocks and unto Samuel Burk two Ewes.

This is the will of me, Ephraim Child.

[First Generation.]

2. Benjamin Child, who emigrated from Great Britain to America, and became the head of the larger number of the families of the name on this side of the Atlantic, from strong presumptive evidence was the nephew of Ephraim Child of Watertown, with whom we commence this Genealogy. Patriarchal in the best sense, we find Mr. Child to have been earnest in character, and in the promotion of that puritan stamp of piety for which the Massachusetts settlers were especially distinguished Mr. Benjamin Child was of that order of nobility bearing the stamp affixed at the departure from Eden. Methodical and exact in habit Mr. Child is known to have been; and legal manuscripts carefully preserved at the present time by some of his descendants, attest his familiarity with affairs, and fine standing in the community.

In the records of Roxbury, Mr. Benjamin Child is stated to have been of the thirty who contributed the joint sum of £104. 05s. for the erection of the First Church of Roxbury; one of the customs peculiar to the period connected with the building of this "meeting-house," was a "raising," the bill of expenses and provisions amounting to £20 15s. 10d. and £9 5s. "to the hands for et ceteras."

Bearing the name of the youngest son of the Head of the Israelites, Mr. Benjamin Child, like that patriarch, "in the land wherein he was a stranger," became the father of twelve children, an example his descendants have satisfactorily emulated. We are very glad also to say in this connection, that the probity, sterling integrity, and devout conscientiousness of their progenitor, are found to have been transmitted, in complete verification of the strong assurances of the Decalogue.

Of the time or place of Mr. Benjamin Child's marriage, we are ignorant, and only know that his wife bore the sweet name, Mary, was like her scriptural predecessors a follower of the Master: "was admitted to the Church of Roxbury in 1658;" she survived her husband, though we know not for what length of time. Mr. Benjamin Child died the fourteenth day of October, 1678, residing at that time in Roxbury, near Jamaica Pond (or the Great Pond), as it was then called; and his estate there has been the homestead of his direct descendants until a few years since.

The accompanying inventory of his estate and effects, the original of which, complete and clear, is held in choice keeping in the family, is appended, that his posterity, scattered through nearly every State in the Union, may be informed of the exact fortune left by their greatest grandfather in America:

3. i. Ephraim Child, second of the name in America, and eldest son of Benjamin Child of Roxbury, was born in Roxbury in 1654. He was baptized a few years later with two younger brothers, by the Rev. John Elliot, pastor of the Church in Roxbury, of which his parents were members. He was made, by his great uncle, Mr. Ephraim Child of Watertown, heir to a large portion of his estate; he had not long entered upon these possessions when the Massachusetts colony was distracted and devastated by the relentless slaughter of many of its inhabitants, in combats known as "Phillip's War." Ephraim Child, with other valiant young men under command of Capt. Beers, was slain by the Indians at Northfield, Massachusetts, on the 23d of September, 1675.

Thus was Mr. Benjamin Child called to seal his faith in the consecration of his eldest born upon the altar of patriotism; and the young man, though leaving no wife or child to mourn his early death, has yet bequeathed to those of his race an heritage of honorable self-sacrifice, for native land and for the right. His property was shared by his brothers and sisters.

[Second Generation.]

4. ii. BENJAMIN, second son and child of Benjamin and Mary Child of Roxbury, was born in Roxbury, in 1656. The death of his elder brother, Ephraim Child, gave him the seniority in his father's family, and the British laws of primogeniture being then in force in the colonies, he was thereby the inheritor of the larger share of his father's property, or the Benjamin "double portion."

He remained at the homestead, and we believe felt constrained to follow in all good ways the example of his parents. Moved by the charms of a fair young maiden, he asked her hand in marriage, and on the 7th of March, 1683, he was united in holy wedlock to Grace Morris, who was born Feb. 17, 1661, a daughter of Deacon Edward and Grace Bett Morris. "Dea. Morris was one of the projectors and early settlers of the town of Woodstock, Ct. From 1677 to 1684, he was one of the selectmen of Roxbury, and during the same period was also a deputy from that town to the General Court of Massachusetts, and during part of the time Colonial Auditor. Grace Morris was admitted to the church June 21, 1681." The goodly number of twelve sons and daughters again made cheery the Puritan's demure household. Deed of sale of the property of his brother Ephraim, is on record in the name of Benjamin Child, who acted for the heirs. We give the quaint document accompanying—wherein he settles with brothers and sisters in the partition of the paternal heritage, as many will be interested to look in this way into the past. This union, so complete, was broken by death, but for an exceedingly brief period. Mrs. Grace Morris Child died on the 10th of December, 1723, and her husband joined her on the 24th of January, 1724.

CHAPTER II.

WOODSTOCK FAMILIES.

It will be found by a close observation of the records, that a restless spirit has moved upon the family at intervals, resulting in an emigration of numbers. The first movement of this kind in America was made from Roxbury, Mass. to the new settlement of New Roxbury, made as it was supposed, within the bounds of the Massachusetts colony. "Need for more extended pasturage," awakened the residents of Roxbury to action, and resulted in accordance with the custom of the period, in referring the matter to the minister, the Rev. John Elliot, first pastor of the Roxbury church; a man whose labors on behalf of the Indians has consecrated his name forever. In the various journeyings Mr. Elliot had made in this missionary work, he had noted very correctly the soil and climate of the Massachusetts and Connecticut colonies, and upon his commendation the selectmen of Roxbury petitioned the General Court of the Massachusetts colony for a grant of land, then supposed to be within the boundaries of that colony, which was awarded them, and some thirteen of their number were appointed "to spy out and take possession." The section within which selection was made at that period was known as the "Nipmuck, or Nipmung country;" but few Indians remained in the immediate vicinity, the larger number had been slain in "King Phillip's War." The Indian name for the location was "Wabquassit, or Wappaquassit." Here the "Apostle Elliot" had preached to the Indians on the 16th of September, 1674, and the colonists felt a blessing must attend a place thus consecrated.

Reluctant to un-link them from the homesteads, the new settlement was for a period called New Roxbury, but from this it would seem some conflicting claims arose, and petition was had to the General Court for a change of name, granted to them on the eighteenth of March, 1690. The private diary of Judge Samuel Sewall of Boston, says, "I gave New Roxbury the name of Woodstock, because of its nearness to Oxford, for the sake of Queen Elizabeth, and the notable meetings that have been held at that place bearing the name in England," Woodstock, Connecticut, lying eight miles apart from Oxford, Massachusetts, as do the old towns of the names in Great Britain. A brief enumeration of some of the historical associations clustering in and about the old town of Woodstock in the motherland, may not be amiss for the instruction of the younger members of this clan, resident in Connecticut, or claiming descent therefrom. The Saxon and Norman kings made this place a royal residence; here King Alfred, whose religious and literary culture was so superior for the time, pursued his studies; here Princess Elizabeth was retired to escape the intriguing machinations of Queen Mary's suspicious advisers. Sir Walter Scott founds one of his Waverley novels upon a legend of the town.

An amusingly brief and explicit classification of the people of Roxbury is made in the records of transfer to the new settlement; those emigrating were termed "Goers," those remaining "Stayers." The division of the land was made by lot, at a meeting held for the purpose, the minister opening with prayer. After appropriating a certain number of acres for a site for the "meeting house" and the "burial ground," with a reserved quarry for "hearth and building stone," a portion of twenty acres for each householder was made, the exact location of this homestead being attained by the lot. We find the minister drew the third lot. The local name given to this village location was "Plain Hill," now known as the "South Parish Hill of Woodstock." The erection of a pastor's house was decided upon at a town meeting on the 27th of October, 1690, with the details of size, "four stacks of chimneys and gables," the building to be sufficiently completed for use within two years. As a defence from the ravages of fire, each inhabitant was ordered to provide a ladder and buckets for his house before a stated day, and "Jonathan Peak was to see that this was done." This ordinance for ladders and buckets we find to have been made six years before the establishment of the first fire insurance company in England. Mr. John Chandler, Jr., by an act at a regular town meeting, "was requested and procured to teach the children to read, write and cipher." The colony thus sent out into the wilderness was never forgotten by those remaining in Roxbury, but was "the constant subject of prayer by the Roxbury church, the Rev. Mr. Elliot being wont on every Sabbath in his public prayers in the church uniformly to pray for the 'colony in New Roxbury.'" But on one occasion, when the congregation had assembled on the Sabbath for worship, the pious Elliot neglected to mention in his prayers the "colony of New Roxbury," closed and took his seat. This neglect of the minister was noticed by the godly fathers and mothers of the church with great pain, and they began to fear the children at New Roxbury would be devoured by the wild beasts or destroyed by the Indians, and the iniquity of the fathers visit their children, because they had been omitted by the godly Elliot. While the good mothers were thus sitting depressed in spirit at so great a neglect, it occurred to the minister that he had not made mention of the New Roxbury colony in his prayer, and he immediately arose in his pulpit and exclaimed: "Alas! alas! I forgot to pray for our sons and daughters at New Roxbury, and therefore let us again pray!" He made a most fervent prayer, especially for the colony, much to the comfort and relief of the congregation.

We do not find any of the Child name on the list of the first "goers," but a few years later the name occurs frequently upon the town records, as actors in the differing posts of honor and toil, in affairs of the town, and in the defence of colony and country from internal and external foes. At this early period, we find seven brothers of the Child name settled in the north part of the town. The scarcity of "neat cattle" in the new world limited the supply so that many who would wish to do so were unable to own any. One cow was owned by these seven brothers, Child, and they took turns in the use of her, one week at a time, except immediately before the Thanksgiving Day, when the elder brother was allowed to keep the cow long enough to accumulate a supply of milk which should suffice to enable the gathered households to enjoy a "Thanksgiving Supper of hasty pudding and milk." On one occasion of the annual gathering of the seven households, beneath the elder brother's roof

the supper was duly prepared, and set forth upon a large "fall-leaf-table," each family provided with their wooden bowls and wooden spoons. According to their custom, all were standing around the frugal supper, while the elder brother, as patriarch, asked the Divine blessing; while thus solemnly engaged, the large watch dog, in passing under the table, moved the leg up-holding the leaf, and down went table, milk and pudding. The younger brother saw the table falling, and cried out, "Stop, brother! Stop! stop! The pudding is gone, and the milk is gone. and of what use is the blessing now; but kill the dog!")

The Puritan training, though thoroughly observed and reverenced, could not wholly subdue the natural temper, or exclude all humor from the occasional gatherings of young or old.

In 1690, a Congregational Church and Society was organized, and religious services maintained for several years without a settled minister, when the Rev. Josiah Dwight was installed as pastor, which relation he held for thirty-seven years with mutual satisfaction of pastor and people, when an unfortunate difference with regard to church discipline and some other matters sprung up which led to the termination of the pastorate. Mr. Dwight was esteemed as a man of decided talents, and religiously devoted to the interests of his charge during his long pastorate. The revolution in this church led to the organization of the church and society in "Muddi Brook," now East Woodstock, in the year 1759, by the majority who claimed to be the first church of Woodstock. A new house of worship was erected in this parish; the church records were retained by this majority, and a pastor, Rev. William Graves, was installed, while the minority remained undisturbed in their original place of worship, and in possession of the Society's property.

[Third Generation.]

Ephraim Child was the eldest of the seven brothers who migrated from Roxbury, Mass., to "New Roxbury," Ct. (afterwards called Woodstock). He removed shortly before or immediately after his marriage, in 1710, and settled in that part of the town now called East Woodstock (anciently known as Muddi Brook), erecting for himself a house, which, with some additions, has been retained in the line of his male descendants till the present time, covering a period of quite 170 years. Its enlargement, at a somewhat early period, made it as it now stands, a commodious and attractive home. Its site is in a beautiful vale, about half a mile east of East Woodstock village. It was probably at this house where occurred the amusing incident on a Thanksgiving occasion, which is found recorded in the early part of this chapter. Many pleasant memories cluster around this ancient home. It has been the birthplace of sons and daughters, whose history, with that of a long line of descendants, it is pleasant to trace. In this house hospitalities for many generations have been liberally dispensed to kindred and aliens, particularly on the Sabbath, when, in the interval between the morning and afternoon religious service, numbers of worshippers living remote from the place of worship, accepted as an accorded right, a hearty meal of boiled meats and vegetables, or a soporific lunch of hasty pudding and milk: this latter being the favorite repast, particularly of one, who could not resist the luxury of a quiet nap under the afternoon sermon.

These were the good old times which the elder men of the present age like to recall, and which link them to the memory of uncles, aunts, grandfathers and grandmothers.

Before this ancient dwelling stands a magnificent elm, whose trunk and outspreading branches are emblematical of a noble ancestor and his sturdy descendants. In 1876 this stately elm was christened the "Centennial Tree." More than one hundred years had passed since man and beast had rested beneath its grateful shade.

Mr. Ephraim Child was a prominent man of his day. He was intelligent, patriotic, enterprising, generous and self-sacrificing. His patriotism was kindled by the stirring incidents of the times, and he was among the first of the early defenders of colonial interests. In 1753 he held a commission as Lieutenant in Company 17, in 11th Regiment of Infantry, in Connecticut, and was active in the revolutionary struggles for independence. He was a man of broad views, of a warm and sympathetic nature, living for others quite as much as for himself. Earnest in efforts for the public good, he drew around him men less brave, who shared in his sympathies and profited by his counsels. In church affairs he was conscientious, steadfast and reliable, a leader whose integrity and wisdom secured the confidence of his Christian brethren, and rendered him a fit man to transmit to posterity, attractive and valuable characteristics.

[Fifth Generation.]

From papers furnished by one of the descendants of Increase Child, we obtain items of his history which reveal a somewhat eventful life, showing manliness, patriotism, and personal virtues. Captain Increase, as he comes to our notice, is a lusty, burly youth, of a mercurial temperament, of an adventurous disposition, not content with the monotony of a home devoid of excitments, bent upon knowing and seeing what was going on in the world. At scarcely sixteen years of age, when Israel Putnam was commissioned by the Connecticut colony as captain, in 1755, in the French war, young Increase, in response to the call for volunteers, was among the first to be enrolled, and served through the seven years' campaign of this war. He fought in the battles at Crown Point and Ticondaroga. At the time of Putnam's capture, in 1756, young Child was marching near him. The Indians seized Putnam and bound him to a tree, where he was exposed to the fire of both friends and foes. How Putnam was extricated from his position, our informant does not tell. But he lived, as we know, to fight the battles of the Revolution. Returning to the old homestead at the close of this war, he tarried but a short time, when he left and went to Dutchess county, N. Y., and engaged in school teaching in a place called "Oblong," deriving its name probably from its peculiar shape, as a point of land adjacent to the Hudson river. After spending a few years in teaching, he returned to Woodstock, Ct., and married Miss Pease of Somers. He made Woodstock, Ct., his home for a number of years, rearing some of his children, if not all, in this town, when the attractions of the then west brought him back to the borders of the Hudson river. Taking his eldest son (Salmon Child), then a lad, on horseback behind him, he went to Dutchess county, N. Y., provided a home, and brought over his family, and settled there.

When the Revolutionary war broke out, he enlisted under General Schuyler, as captain. Under Generals Schuyler and Gates he served through the war and obtained an honorable discharge. In this campaign his son (Salmon) acted at first as a waiter for his father, being too young at the commencement of the war to be taken as a soldier, but before its close his name was enrolled on the list of volunteers. The excitments and hardships of war during an eight years' service were not sufficient to break the force of will and purpose in Captain Increa Child. The northern section of the State of New York, through which the army of Schuyler and Gates had been led, presented such attractions to Captain Child that he resolved to make it his future home. His settlement was in Milton, Saratoga county, N. Y., where he became a permanent and useful citizen. The early opportunities of Captain Increase Child for a substantial education, that should qualify him for practical life, had been well improved. He was an excellent penman, and a competent surveyor and conveyancer, and a man of excellent general business capacity. The inherent force of character evinced by Increase Child in budding youth did not expend itself in riper years; nor did it expire at his death and leave no traces in the long line of descendants of this remarkable man.

As we trace the history of this branch of the family name, there lies along the entire line, at not very wide intervals, the most robust and sturdy qualities of mental and physical manliness and moral worth. The children of Captain Increase Child were among the best and most enlightened citizens of their day. Nor have succeeding generations exhibited less noble, manly, patriotic and intelligent characteristics.

[Sixth Generation.]

42. ii. Judge Salmon Child, second child of Captain Increase and Olive Pease Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Sept. 19, 1765, m. Jan. 7, 1787, Olive Rose. She was b. Oct. 23, 1763, and died May 2, 1825. He died at East Troy, Walworth Co., Wisconsin, Jan. 28, 1856. They had five children.
Judge Salmon Child in his boyhood received his education amid the stirring scenes of the Colonial Revolution. His surroundings in his youth were of a character to foster manly sentiments and noble aspirations. His contact with men of large ideas and elevated purposes helped to develop him into the man he was in after life. When his father, Captain Increase Child, returned from the French War, with experiences full of stirring incident, the son could but catch the spirit and imbibe the sentiments of the father. Thus was laid the foundation of a noble character in the great and good man he came to be in after life. As already related in his father's history, he entered the Revolutionary army at an early age, serving as his father's waiter, being too young for regular service. When arrived at the proper age, he put on the trappings of the soldier, and fought the battles of freedom by the side of his patriot sire. At the close of the war he went with his father to Saratoga county, N. Y., and effected an independent settlement in the town of Greenfield in that county. In 1787 he married Olive Rose, and entered upon a new career of life. His experiences in the army, conjoined with inherent qualities of sound sense and uncommon sagacity, fitted him for the duties of civil life. His influence as a leading citizen in town and county was early acknowledged, and the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens is clearly indicated by the official positions to which he was elected by their suffrages. But it was not in a civil capacity alone that Judge Child contributed a healthful influence to the conditions of society. Few men could be found at that period more truly conscientious, and who comprehended more clearly the importance of educational and religious institutions in establishing a prosperous community. The estimate in which Judge Child was held in the town and county where he spent a long life will be seen in an obituary notice, taken from a Saratoga, N. Y., weekly paper, which we give in this connection:

Judge Salmon Child was for a long time a resident of Saratoga county, N. Y. He was one of the first settlers in West Greenfield, more than seventy years ago, and resided there until a few years since, when he and his family removed West. He was a pensioner, having when quite young gone out with his father, who was a captain in the Revolutionary war. He was a prominent member of the Baptist Church, and had much to do in its formation and maintenance where he resided. He was one of the six or eight men in Greenfield who formed one of the first temperance societies in this county, in 1809. He was a plain farmer, a plain common-sense man, and ever sustained an irreproachable, moral and religious character; the great weight of which brought him into public life. He was twice elected as Member of Assembly from this county, and was appointed and served for a number of years as first judge of the county. He was elected in 1821 a member of the convention to amend the Constitution of the State of New York. Perhaps no non-professional man ever received a greater share of public offices in the county. He has served out a long life (91 yrs.) of usefulness. He died calmly and in peace, and has entered upon the rest prepared for the people of God.

We append the following quotations from the writings of Judge Salmon Child, as illustrating his times and himself. In part, they are from a long letter addressed to his granddaughter and her husband, when the Judge was eighty-five years of age, and from an article prepared for a newspaper publication called the Repository. The letter begins with a clear statement of his religious faith, especially his strong belief in the Trinity, quoting from the Old and New Testaments, passages elucidating and verifying his deductions, bringing out with unmistakable emphasis the doctrines of free will and moral responsibility, closing this portion of the letter with these words:

The history both of the Old Testament and the New, and of the Church of Christ down to the present day, teaches us that settling down on a form of Godliness, without the spirit or power thereof, God abhors. And it is the stronghold, the foundation of anti-Christ's kingdom. As long as a Christian or a Christian church live in the faith, in the love, spirit and obedience of the Gospel of Christ, they will grow in grace and in knowledge daily, and become the "salt of the earth," the light of the world, a "city set on a hill that cannot be hid."

He then gives some account of his early life:

My parents and grandparents lived in Woodstock, Connecticut. My grandfather belonged to what was then called the "Standing Order," since, "Congregationalists." They were very strict in keeping the Sabbath and all the forms of religion, as they understood them. They kept Saturday night. All kind of labor, in doors and out, was laid aside as soon as the sun set, and if it was necessary they should boil victuals for the Sabbath, every thing was prepared and put into the pot before the sun set. They took the whole family to meeting, and after returning, and supper was over, the children were taught the Westminster catechism, or other religious exercises, until the sun set, which was watched very closely by us children, and not forgotten by the elders. The moment it was said, "It is sundown," the men were out preparing for the week's work, the women making all things ready for the wash-tub, and the children all hilarity. When I was about six years old my father moved into Dutchess county, New York, about one mile from the west line of Connecticut. The Stamp Act had been passed and repealed before this time, but a number of other oppressive laws had been passed. There was at that time very little paper made in America, and no contract, even to a note of hand, could be collected, or was lawful, unless written on stamped paper, sent from England. Boston was the center-place of opposition to these oppressions, and regular troops were sent there to enforce these laws. Under these circumstances, the patriotic neighborhood where my father resided, formed into a minute company, to be ready at all times, when called for in defence of their country.

Soon after the battle of Bunker Hill my father was called to the City of New York, received a captain’s commission to enlist a company for one year, from the following first of April. He did so, and rendezvoused with his company on Constitution Island, opposite West Point, for the purpose of fortifying that place, so as to stop navigation on the Hudson, of British shipping going up to the head of navigation, which would leave but 50 or 60 miles of land for an army to cross to the head of Lake Champlain. It was so important to fortify West Point and the Highlands, that a number of the officers took their sons (under 14 years) for waiters, that all the able-bodied men might serve. My father took me only in my eleventh year. I served only ten months. On the 1st of April, 1777, all my father’s resources were spent, and he involved in debt. In 1777, the British sent an army from New York up the Hudson and another from Montreal to meet at Albany. The one from the south took Fort Montgomery. Had the British succeeded in their plans of cutting off the New England States from the Southern, the declaration of ’76 would have continued to be treated with contempt. Soon after, my father became captain of a company of volunteers, raised to stop the progress of Burgoyne. The company joined Gates’ army at Stillwater, Saratoga county, where they stayed until the surrender of the British army. My father was so well suited with the land in Stillwater, he bargained for a farm, about three miles from where the battles were fought, and he and myself went there in March, prepared for and put in some grain, and a garden, and he returned for the family.

It being a wooded country, and but little of the farm cleared, in the spring a number of the bodies of men were found. They had been buried in so shallow a grave, the covering so light, the wolves had dug them up and partially devoured them. Some parts of the battles had been fought in the woods. I think it was the next winter a negro, sent to the woods with his axe to chop trees, not returning, he was searched for, and it was found he had fought a large number of wolves, killed two with his axe, but they were too numerous and had killed and partly eaten him. Wolves were so plenty sheep could be kept only by shutting them in a close pen at night.

My father was a well-read man and had as good an education as any at that period, who had not enjoyed collegiate advantages. Was with General Putnam (then Major) in two campaigns of the French war, and was within a few feet of him when the Indians captured him. My father was a whig, and lived in a neighborhood of whigs. I, of course, heard much said about the whig and tory parties in the British parliament, and although a boy, I turned to an old English dictionary to find the meaning of these words so closely connected with the serious and fearful anxieties that appeared on the countenances of the more aged. The original meaning of whig I found to be whey, buttermilk, or small beer, and was first applied to those in Scotland who held their meetings in the fields, their food being buttermilk; afterwards a nickname given those who opposed the court and high church party in the times of King Charles and James II. The word tory was used in Ireland to signify robbers, murderers, who stood outlawed for their crimes; subsequently a name given the opulent, overbearing, ecclesiastical and political aristocracy of the British Government. I, of course, venerated the whig party, and abhorred the other. There was another source from which I learned much. At that time there was published a small weekly newspaper, under the heading Common Sense, several articles appeared, giving a very clear and discriminating view of the principles of the British Government and contrasting them with a republican. From these sources, I formed the opinions which have been my polar star through my three score years and ten. Great honors have been bestowed on the patriot soldiers of the Revolution; but the mothers, wives and daughters of those noble men bore their full share of the sufferings of those times, and are equally with them entitled to the gratitude of the present and future generations.

As a physician and surgeon, Dr. Child was eminent not only in Saratoga county, for many years his field of practice, but attained a high standing in the state. His medical associates held him in great esteem for his personal qualities as well as superior skill in his profession. His services as a lecturer in his profession were often sought and obtained by the medical colleges in the country, and his opinions in critical cases were deferred to by the medical fraternity. His private virtues secured for him the confidence of all classes, and gave him commanding influence. His patrons were not altogether among the rich and influential; the humble dwellings of the poor and lowly were never shunned by Dr. Child. Endowed by nature with noble and generous feelings, expanded and deepened by the force of a Christian faith, he was drawn to the needy, on whom he freely expended his counsels and aid without fee or reward. As a public benefactor, he early espoused the temperance reform, and from his personal popularity, reclaimed some from habits of intemperance, and saved many by his persuasions and his methods for prescribing for his patients from falling into these habits. Seldom, if ever, did he prescribe alcoholic liquors as a tonic.

Mrs. Child was scarcely less popular among her extensive acquaintances and her husband's patients. By nature and culture, she was a lady of great personal attractions. Her qualities of heart were among her greatest charms. She seems to have been the counterpart of her noble husband. One of her daughters says of her, "by her ladylike qualities and kindness of heart she gained many friends. Many a time have I seen her fill a basket with delicacies, provisions and clothing for poor families, the patients of my father, to be conveyed by him in his round of visits to their humble abodes." In speaking of her mother, in the portrayal of her excellencies, another daughter says, "I cannot say enough in her praise." And at her burial, her clergyman speaks of her as embodying all that is lovely and attractive.

Mr. Child was a dry goods merchant at Dryersburg, Tennessee. His death has occurred but recently, (March 9, 1879,) and was very sudden. Mrs. Child writes us that "He died of a congestive chill fever. A few days previous to his death, while in health, he received your letter asking for his family record, when he expressed himself greatly pleased at the prospect of a genealogy of the Child family, and had set apart the very day of his death for preparing his family record," the melancholy duty falling upon his wife, which she has faithfully performed. Mr. Child was popular as a citizen in Dryersburg, once Mayor of the city, and esteemed for his probity, magnanimity and generosity. He removed to Tennessee in 1859, and through the sectional strife adhered to the old flag of the Union, affording ample proof that the blood of his Puritan ancestry was running in his veins not less warmly than in the veins of the fathers in the days of the Revolution.

53. iv. William Child, second son and fourth child of Judge Salmon and Olive Rose Child, was b. in Greenfield, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Jan. 4, 1798, m. Feb. 5, 1820, to Susan Deake. She was b. Dec. 25, 1798. On the 14th of May, 1861, Mr. Child writes to his cousin Olive, dau. of Dr. Increase W. Child, sending to her a copy of the family record from the old family Bible,—"Wm. Child, b. Jan. 4, 1798, m. to Susan Deake Feb. 5, 1820, and are this day living joyfully together, through the mercy of God, May 14, 1861."

Mr. William Child was the youngest son, and the home son, until the spring of 1836, when he moved to Gorham, Ontario county, where he resided some eleven years. In 1847, he again moved with his family to Walworth county, Wis., and here remained until his death. His children were born in Greenfield, Saratoga county, N. Y. In stature five feet ten inches, like his mother's family (the Rose) he was spare, but with the Child complexion and eyes. Fragile in health in early years, he used to say of himself that, "he grew up a puny, petted and spoiled child," owing some unusual indulgence to the frequent absence from home upon public affairs of his father, Judge Child. He was kind and tender in heart, impulsive, and sometimes irritable in temper, but never retaining ill-will. Of hunting and fishing, he was passionately fond, and always loved his dog and gun. An admirer of Burns and Shakespeare, whom he read effectively, and thus instructed and entertained his children in the long winter evenings: with his family, he shared all his pursuits and pleasures in a marked degree. Indeed, he attributed his conversion to the lovely christian life and daily prayers of his wife, though he had an inheritance of godliness. After his removal to the west, he became an earnest Christian worker. Linked with the Baptist denomination, he served almost gratuitously the "Wisconsin Baptist State Missionary Convention," for some time: in a quiet and effective manner, collecting and dispensing funds: and awakening a strong sympathy between the different Baptist churches in the State. With equal enthusiasm he regarded the causes of education and politics. The last outside activities of this fond husband and wife, were ministrations in the household of a poor German family, who were all sick. Mrs. Child caught the fever, and her death from it occurred on the 17th of April, 1865: two days previous President Lincoln had been assassinated. Mr. Child was an ardent admirer of President Lincoln, and the shock of these two deaths was too severe. With no organic disease, he succumbed on the 24th of the same month. Walking from the fire to his bed, he lay down, waved his hand to his son James standing near, and smiling said, "Good-bye." These incidents are related by his son, Rev. Increase Child.

Rev. Mr. Child is an inheritor from his paternal and maternal ancestry, of that "mercy unto thousands of them that love Me and keep my Commandments," and lives to perpetuate the promise to future generations. The wonderful transmission of characteristics peculiar to different families, has found in him a dual manifestation. In early life he seemed to partake entirely of the mental features of his mother's family; with advancing years these were largely overgrown by the Child qualities.

In the work of the ministry, Mr. Child has found his sphere, and by it has been compelled to conquer that vis inertie which is thought to be a Child characteristic, often hindering them from being and doing all they might. Chastened by afflictions, he is the true consoler of the sorrowing; craving knowledge, he is fitted to instruct and elevate others; loving his Master, he labors untiringly to win his flock into the fold of the good Shepherd. Quick in his sympathies, he has been earnest in his efforts to aid in this memorial work of a noble ancestry.

138. ii. Alfred Bosworth Child, second child and first son of Mark Anthony and Hannah Benedict Child, b. in the town of Greenfield, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Nov. 19, 1796, m. March 19, 1817, Polly Barber who was b. March 30, 1799. She was the daughter of Ichabod and Anne Deake Barber. He died Dec. 22, 1852. They had twelve children.
The somewhat eventful history of Mr. Alfred Bosworth Child, which we here annex, is furnished by one of his sons, Warren Gould Child, who passed through many of the experiences of the father, and has much of his zeal for the Mormon faith:

Alfred Bosworth Child, my father, was married to Polly, daughter of Ichabod and Anne Deake Barber. He soon after his marriage moved to the town of Morristown, St. Lawrence county, New York, where he purchased a small farm, of which he cleared and cultivated some thirty acres, and through economy and industry acquired a limited amount of property. It was here, in the year 1837, that the principles of Mormonism were sounded in his ears, and after a careful investigation of the same he embraced Mormonism, sold his farm and moved West to Kirtland, Ohio. Staying there but a few months, he then left with his family for Caldwell county, Missouri, where he arrived in the fall of the same year having made the entire journey with only one team consisting of two horses.

The family had been settled upon a farm purchased by them, when the persecutions commenced upon the Mormons. We were compelled to leave in the following spring. The farm and one horse were taken and confiscated by the mob.

He next settled in Lee county, Iowa, in the year 1840, taking up and improving a farm on what was known as the half breed track, remaining there about seven years. In 1841, he accepted the position of postmaster at what is known as Spring Prairie post office, which position he held as long as he remained in the county, which he left through the persecutions of the Mormon people, in 1847. He then started further West, travelling through that portion of the state which at that time was inhabited by the Pottowattamie Indians. He settled again at or near where Council Bluffs City, Iowa, now stands, taking up and improving another farm on which he lived about five years.

Salt Lake Valley having been selected as a last resort for the more peaceful settlement of the Mormon people, he again, now the fourth time, left all he had. On the 8th day of July, 1852, he started for Salt Lake Valley, where he arrived on the first day of the following October, having travelled in wagons drawn by oxen and cows over one thousand miles across uninhabited desert and mountainous country. On the 22nd day of the next December he died of disease of the lungs, brought on through exposure and the hardships of his journeyings. His age was 56 years, 1 mo. and 7 days. He left a wife with four sons and three daughters.

153. i. Ichabod Child, b. April 20, 1818, d. young.
154. ii. Mary Child, b. March 15, 1819, d. young.

Mark Alfred Child enlisted in the U. S. Army at Fort Leavenworth, Mo., in 1844. He marched overland to Mexico as one of Gen. Kearney’s staff, which position he held during the war with Mexico, where he received a lance wound in the neck, and a ball wound in the instep, which disabled him from active service. At the close of the war he was discharged with a pension. After recovering from his wounds he went to Upper California; was there in the great gold excitement, where he engaged in the ranching business, was very successful for a time, when the Indians made a raid on his stock driving it off. He with a posse went in pursuit, in which they were ambushed in a cañon and their entire party killed.

Warren G. Child writes of M. B. Child:

M. B. Child, now in his 54th year, crossed the plains to Utah in 1850, and settled in or near Ogden. Is a farmer and a prominent citizen; has held various offices of profit and trust, and, like all bearing the name of Child, with whom we have formed any acquaintance, stands high and unblemished in society. Is in stature of medium height, active and jovial, and rather inclined to be corpulent.

His second marriage was to Martha Jane Elmer, daughter of David and Wealthy Elmer, who was b. March 2, 1838, in the state of Indiana. His third marriage was to Jane Bybee, daughter of Lee and Nancy Bybee. She d. Jan. 19, 1878.
We have already intimated that Mr. Warren Gould Child is a mormon. While having no sympathy whatever with those addicted to such false views of social life and progress, as we deem them, it is yet quite in accordance with our plan of doing justice to all so far as it is possible, to let each one make his own presentation of himself and his family from his own standpoint of thought and feeling. It is easy to see from his history in Utah, that he is a man of robust constitution, of great physical endurance, bold, fearless and of untiring energy; shrewd, sagacious, far seeing in business, and persistent and determined in his undertakings. The following incidents are from his own pen:

Warren G. Child, now engaged in the mercantile business at Ogden, besides the various travels with his father's family, has crossed the plains to and from Utah, nine different times, five times with ox, cow and horse power. Was one of the early settlers of Utah, settling in Ogden City in 1852; married Miss Hannah A. Wilder of Elba, N. Y., in the winter of 1853. In the spring of '54, accompanied by his wife, he crossed the plains and visited their friends in the State of New York. While on the desert our small party was attacked by Indians, who, except for the interposition of a friendly Indian actuated by a higher power, would doubtless have massacred the whole of our party. Our losses were provisions and other valuables. Having lost our provisions, death by starvation strongly presented itself to our view, for we were several hundred miles from any settlement. But again, like the children of Israel who, through the providence of God, were provided for, we too, were met by a party of emigrants of whom we procured sufficient food to last us to the nearest settlement.

We remained with our friends in the East nearly two years and again returned to Utah, crossing the plains with five wagons drawn by ox and cow power. During this tedious journey of three months duration and about midway, near the foot of the Black Hills, our second son was given us, five hundred miles from the nearest settlement. This almost proved too much for my wife and child, being exposed to the broiling sun by day and the cold mountain breezes by night, with only canvas covers to shelter them, but they both survived. We arrived at and settled in Ogden, and engaged in farming under many disadvantages, having our crops (raised only by artificial irrigation) for several years in succession destroyed by locusts and crickets, and for a time famine was at our doors. Flour could only be had at the price of twenty to thirty dollars per sack of one hundred pounds, and but little at these figures; many were compelled to live on roots, herbs, etc.

The winter following being of such a severe character, and so much snow having fallen, we could obtain no food for our stock (which had been by this time reduced to mere skeletons) except that browsed from felled trees, and famine throughout our land, with even more serious results seemed imminent.
The locusts and pests that did not deposit themselves in the Great Salt Lake, left our pastures for others more green, and we were enabled to raise bountiful crops which commanded good prices, this being a recruiting point for the Overland California and Oregon Emigration. Rich mines of gold, silver and lead were discovered in all parts of our territory, demanding more easy transit to and through our country. Soon the great Continental and other railroads were built, making Ogden the centre of four different railroads and the junction of the U. P. & S. P. Railroads.

But a few years ago our country a desert, and pronounced unproductive, is now dotted for three hundred miles south and one hundred and fifty miles north, with towns and villages and rich fields of grain, making a pleasant and healthful resort for eastern tourists and invalids. The population of Utah now numbers some 160,000, three-fourths of which number are that peculiar people called Mormons, with whom the writer of this is numbered. He is 44 years old at this writing, 1879, is the father of twenty-five children, twenty of whom are now living, four of them are married, he has nine grandchildren. His mother, now living, has had near two hundred grand and great grandchildren, all of whom are located in Utah Territory.

Since my arrival in Utah, my travels have been various. In the spring of '58, I was called with a number of others to go north to Salmon River, Idaho, where a settlement had been formed by people of our faith, which had been besieged by Indians, who had killed some three or four of their number. Upon our arrival we were placed on the defensive, but before any further troubles arose we effected a settlement with the "Reds," recovering from them part of our lost property. Our party then started for their homes in the south, and on our way we were attacked by Indians, who killed and scalped one of our number. Other and like scenes I have gone through, but my scalp has been and is to-day my own property.

Not wishing to occupy too much space, I do not wish to say more only by way of advice, and encouragement to those of our family following after. I would have them first learn the characters of their forefathers, and then strive with all their powers to keep up the reputation which has been so dearly bought and maintained up to the present.

143. vii. PAMELIA CHILD, seventh child of Mark Anthony and Hannah Benedict Child, b. Aug. 28, 1804, m. March 9, 1830, Lyman Wooster of Morristown, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. Removed to North Hammond, N. Y.

Mr. Wooster d. Feb. 22, 1849. His sons continued in North Hammond, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., managing the estate till 1855, when most of the family removed to Rock county, Wisconsin. Now reside at Fort Atkinson, Jefferson county, Wis.

Mr. Wooster is a descendant of an honorable family of early emigrants from Worcestershire, England, who settled in Worcester, Mass. The name was originally Worcester. Gradually, from an easier pronunciation, it was shortened to Wooster. It was a family some branches of which flourished in the Revolution. An early member was a General in the army, and fell in battle, in honor of whom government has appropriated $25,000 for a monument. On the mother's side the family alliance is with the Barber family of Rhode Island, and of French descent. This alliance connects with the Gould family, from which has descended the great railway king, Jay Gould. Among the descendants of these early English emigrants, we find many active and enterprising citizens of the present as well as past generations.

Charles Abram Wooster of Hammond, St. Lawrence county, N. Y., is a worthy scion of this stock. His father, Abram Wooster, was a native of Oneida county, N. Y., born in 1800. While yet a boy, he went from his father's home to North Hammond, N. Y., then a wilderness, and commenced business for himself. His outfit consisted of a rifle (of which he was very proud as "a dead shot"), an axe, an extra shirt, and five or six dollars of money. He engaged in the business of lumbering, taking his lumber and timber in rafts to Quebec, Canada. From this business and successful farming operations he has become quite wealthy, and is enjoying a happy old age.
AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

(now 80), hale and hearty, in the town of Hammond. His rifle is still his pet, and his boast is that he can yet bring down a deer at forty rods. He had a brother, David Wooster, who was popularly known for thirty years as a hotel keeper in Oneida county, N. Y.

Charles Abram Wooster, from whom we obtain this account of the Wooster family, is a son of Abram and Phebe Wooster, a prominent citizen of Hammond, a man of much general intelligence, of large enterprise, connected with railways, banking, &c., in St. Lawrence county. He married Ellen A. Savage of Hammond, and has the following children:

1. CHARLES CHANDLER WOOSTER, b. Sept. 17, 1867, d. 1874.

443. i. Miss Eliza A. B. Child was early betrothed to Mr. Cyrenius W. Canfield of Rochester, New York. The acquaintance was made when Miss Child was a pupil of the Academy, and Mr. Canfield a student of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y. The engagement was a long one, for both were young, and Mr. Canfield had his collegiate course to finish, and his professional one to pursue, and then to enter upon its duties and emoluments before they could expect their union. But each was true, and the golden hopes of success illumined the years of waiting.

Earnest study and courageous toil were opening the doors to an honorable and gifted manhood,—fond parents rejoicing in fulfilled expectations,—friends prophesying high attainments and a prominent career,—a bright and loving maiden putting on the festive robes; suddenly the end came; a few days illness, and the life of earth was left for the life of eternity. Parents' hopes crushed, friends' bright anticipations overthrown, sable garments exchanged for bridal sheen, the marriage week became that of entombment. Comforted by the ready and full recognition of her lover's talents and acquirements, made by his friends and legal associates, Miss Child in time could smile again. In September, 1841, she became the wife of Mr. Zalmon Rice a merchant of Lyons, Wayne Co.,
New York, whom she has survived many years. But the glowing tints of her morning have not wholly faded from the evening of her life, and to meet the chosen one of early days, is one of the joys of anticipation crowning the future existence.

[Seventh Generation]

445. iii. ORVILLE WHITMORE CHILDS, third child and second son of Dr. Ephraim and Mary Woodworth Child, b. in Stillwater, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1803, m. Mary G. Eno. (The date of the marriage or birth of children we have been unable to ascertain.)

Orville W. Childs was one of the foremost and ablest practical civil engineers in this country. He was early in the employ of the State of New York, and our magnificent public works attest his genius and his skill. His labors and accomplishments were not confined to this State alone, but were extended to and embraced other gigantic enterprises and works of national interest and renown.

He had charge of a large amount of work, and was engaged in the survey and construction of the Champlain canal improvement, in 1824–5, and the building of the Oswego canal in 1826–8.
He made the survey and plans for the improvement and navigation of the Oneida river in 1829–30, which were adopted, and the work was completed in 1850. He was next engaged with John B. Jervis in constructing the Chenango canal, in 1833–6, and in the latter year commenced his labors on the Erie canal enlargement, which was divided into three divisions, he being the chief engineer of the middle division of that work, which extended from Syracuse to Rochester. He was occupied upon this enlargement during most of the many years it took to complete that great work; but not as a division engineer only, for in 1840 he was appointed chief engineer of the New York State works entire, which position he held and filled with signal ability and honor for a period of seven years.

In 1848 he was the Democratic candidate for the office of state engineer, then created, but was defeated with the rest of the ticket. He was the companion, adviser and trusted friend of Governor William C. Bouck, Azariah C. Flagg, Henry Seymour, Jonas Earll, Jr., Michael Hoffman, Stephen Van Rensselaer and their contemporaries, and shared with John B. Jervis and William J. McAlpine the celebrity and honors arising from the plans upon which the enlarged Erie canal were based.
Of those eminent engineers who grew up with him or under him and reached prominence in their profession are Van R.
Richmond and Sylvanus H. Sweet, each having filled the office of state engineer several different times, and John D. Fay, the eminent canal commissioner.

In 1848-9 he was chief engineer in the survey and construction of the N. Y. Central RR. from Syracuse to Rochester (direct road). He left this to accept a like position at the instance of the American Atlantic and Pacific Ship Canal Co., of which Cornelius Vanderbilt and others were at the head, and who had a grant from the government of Nicaragua, Central America, to build an inter-oceanic ship canal across that country, and in this gigantic enterprise he was occupied in 1850–52. His reports, maps, surveys and estimates of this work attracted universal attention throughout this country and Europe, and are regarded as models of thorough, exact and reliable scientific and practical skill. It was and is still held to be the most feasible and perfect survey of that route, which extended from the harbor of Greytown on the Atlantic, to that of Brito on the Pacific. The difficulties which were overcome, both of an engineering and physical character, to accomplish this work, together with the prominence of the enterprise and the ability with which it was conducted, established and confirmed his high rank in his profession. He also surveyed the route across the country from Lake Nicaragua to the Pacific, of the Accessory Transit Co.'s passenger route, and afterwards visited Europe with Commodore Vanderbilt and others in relation to raising the necessary capital for constructing this ship canal, and was received there with marked attentions and honor. The above reports made by him have now become scarce, out of print, and are highly valued.

Subsequently he became chief engineer, and surveyed and constructed the Terre Haute and Alton RR. in 1855–8; was one of a commission of three to report on the practicability of putting a tunnel under the Hudson river at Albany, and made a survey and important investigation in behalf of the State of New York, for the purpose of designating and fixing the limits and boundaries of the City and County of New York, and to determine the extent of the encroachments thereon, and afterwards was engaged in the matter of the harbor defences about that city.

He removed from Syracuse, N. Y., where he had resided for the greater part of his life, to Philadelphia, Pa., about 1860, where he was engaged as one of the patentees and proprietors of the sleeping cars, then newly invented, and in other railroad interests. Was president of the Central Transportation Co., and the Philadelphia Car Works, and died in that city Sept. 6, 1870.

His name was synonymous with integrity, unflagging industry and high moral and intellectual worth. He was a close, hard student, persevering, and of high and exalted ideas as to his profession, in which he took great pride, and sought by every means in his power to elevate its standard to the highest pitch. He had profound contempt for all who were idle, shiftless, dishonest or unambitious. He was indefatigable in accomplishing whatever he undertook, and was upright, honest and incorruptible, without the shadow of a blemish in his whole professional career. The labors of his pen will be found scattered through the public documents and statute books of this State during a period of forty years prior to his death, and he contributed much to professional literature. He prepared the majority of the canal reports to the Legislature during his time. Always careful, considerate and exact to the minutest point, these habits of thought and action made him a safe counsellor and guide, and his opinion and advice was much sought after. In all these qualities he left a noble example in his profession as well as out of it. He was of dignified, impressive bearing, and unusually fine looking, of full habit and excellent features, and left a handsome fortune. His conversation was deeply interesting, his manner forcible and sincere, and his utterances always carried weight. Vigorous, inflexible in his convictions and accustomed to push all his undertakings to a successful issue, he justly earned the appellation, "an extraordinary man."

447. v. NOADIAH MOODY CHILDS, fifth child and third son of Dr. Ephraim and Mary Woodworth Child, b. in Stillwater, Sar. atoga county, N. Y., Dec. 6, 1806, m. first Oct. 1839, Martha Brewer, dau. of Simeon and Eunice Brewer of Providence, R. I. She was b. Aug. 23, 1821, and d. at Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 31, 1863. His second m. was in Jan. 26, 1865, to Sarah Elizabeth Dawes, dau. of Ebenezer Dawes, Esq.

During the first half of his life, Mr. N. M. Childs was a civil engineer like his brother Orville W., and with him assisted in the running and construction of the Oswego canal, in 1828–9, the Oneida river improvement in 1829–30, and the Chenango canal in 1835. He was then appointed superintendent of the Oswego canal, which office he filled until 1839, and had charge of the extraordinary repairs and improvements made in this canal during that time. He was engaged as an engineer on the Erie canal enlargement from Syracuse to Lyons in 1839–40. In 1841, he entered into mercantile business, and the manufacture of salt at Syracuse, (then Salina) taking up his residence there, and has ever since been so engaged to quite a large extent. He was one of the commissioners of public schools of Syracuse, and was president of the board of education in 1855. He was one of the trustees of the Syracuse Salt Company, and was president of that company in 1872, and a prominent citizen of Syracuse, where he still resides.

Martha Brewer, the first wife of Noadiah M. Childs, (born 1821, died 1863) was a woman of remarkable sweetness of character, deep piety, and good deeds. She practiced a liberal charity, was quiet, unobtrusive, and took a prominent part in church matters. She was one of those who first organized Plymouth Church at Syracuse, and died in the midst of her useful life, deeply bereaved by all who knew her.

Mr. Childs studied at the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and removed from Syracuse to the City of New York, early in 1866. He entered the wholesale woolen house of Hull, Holmes & Ingersoll, in Walker street, and after remaining there a few years, he went into the employ of the Standard Life Insurance Co., of which he was made assistant secretary. In 1871 he received the appointment of superintendent of agencies of the Manhattan Life Insurance Co., and in 1874, became interested with his brother Daniel, in projecting the Law Telegraph Co., heretofore described, and devoted his entire time and energies to building it up to its present successful condition. From its organization he has been a director, its treasurer and manager.

The office of the Company is at 140 Fulton street, N. Y., and he resides at Englewood, N. J.

Barger has been for many years past, extensively known as one of the best and most accomplished steamboat captains on the Mississippi river, both on the upper and lower trade, and by his gentlemanly deportment, by his decision of character, by his upright and honorable action and bearing on all occasions, he won universal confidence and esteem. His sickness was long and painful, terminating in consumption. He died in the full assurance of Christian faith, leaving a devoted wife and friends everywhere to mourn his loss. The funeral of Capt. Barger was attended by many of our citizens at the Episcopal church. He was buried with the honors of Odd Fellowship." Mrs. Caroline C. Barger was again married some years afterwards, May 16, 1868, at the residence of her sister, Mrs. John H. Pope, in New Orleans, to G. M. Gerrish, Professor of Metallurgy, of San Francisco, Cal. The following obituary notice of Mr. William Child is furnished by Mrs. Dr. Jones of Chicago, Ill., his niece, taken from a Michigan paper:

The death of William Child, Esq., at Jefferson, Hillsdale county, Mich., occurred on the 31st of March, 1840, in the sixty-third year of his age. More than merely "he is dead" is due to the memory of Mr. Child. He was connected with the newspaper press of New York State many years. He served his apprenticeship with Solomon Southwick, then Southwick & Barber, printers, in Albany. He first conducted a paper in Saratoga Co., in Jefferson's exciting times, and warmly espoused his cause. He afterwards removed to Johnstown and conducted the Montgomery Republican, with his brother Asa, after which he published the Ballston Spa Gazette. In 1810 he removed to Seneca Co., N. Y., and for several years directed his attention to agricultural pursuits. But his pen was not idle; he contributed freely to the columns of one or more papers—The Boy among the rest, on agricultural and other subjects. He was one of the earlier advocates of temperance, in print, having in 1818 or 1819 prepared a pamphlet called "A Blow at the Bottle," setting forth the alarming effects of the all-prevailing vice, which he printed and gratuitously and liberally circulated. In 1823 he purchased one of the newspaper establishments in Genesee Co., N. Y., which he conducted with great ability till 1837. He also edited an anti-masonic paper, which was the cause of great commotion, and made him many enemies among the masons. It is no more than justice to say that few papers in Western New York were edited with more ability than the Genesee Farmer, by William Child. In the fall of 1838, Mr. Child came to Penn Yan, and for some months conducted the Democratic Whig; but finding himself too far advanced in years to endure the fatigues and perplexities attending the publication of a political paper, he determined to retire from the bustle of a printing office and seek in Michigan a quiet retreat for his old age. Soon after his arrival in that state he was appointed one of the judges of Ingham Co. He was elected judge with a large majority. His friends called upon him in the evening to congratulate him, and staid till a late hour. Shortly after retiring he spoke to his wife and said, "I am dying." Before a physician could arrive he was speechless, and lived but a short time. To say that William Child was an honest man in the full import of the words is an all-sufficient epitaph, and those who knew him will readily bear testimony to its truth. His principles were not purchasable. His patriotism had no price. What was right in his view must be done, even at a sacrifice. As a husband, parent and friend, he was kind and affectionate and warm hearted. So he lived and so he died, suddenly, in a moment, as it were, one of the noblest works of his Creator. But when the summons came he was ready, long having cherished and professed a well-grounded hope of a glorious resurrection and acceptance in and through the merits of his Saviour Jesus Christ.

49. ix. Asa Child, sixth son and ninth child of Increase and Olive Pease Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., May 21, 1780, m. in 1806, Lois Foote of Kingsborough, Fulton Co., N. Y. He d. in 1828, in the City of New York. Mrs. C. was b. in 1783, and d. in Chicago in 1875, in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Jones, at. ninety-two years.

Mr. Child was the youngest of the nine children of Captain Increase and Olive Pease Child. His life was spent as a journalist. He was a genuine man, of solid physical proportions, and of marked intellectual force. The manliness of Mr. Child was conspicuous in his varied relations in life. Just in his feelings, conscientious, transparent, his bearing was dignified and winning. While serving the public at the head of a weekly journal, he was actuated by the most honorable motives, and gave currency to what he deemed the soundest principles of good government. No flattery or denunciation could alter in him an honest conviction. By nature unobtrusive and retiring, he studiously avoided collision with those differing from him on questions of public concern. But he was not pusillanimous or craven. Occasions sometimes brought out the grit and force of character which lay hidden ordinarily beneath an unruffled surface. It is related of him that on one occasion in a time of high political excitement, a man who felt himself aggrieved at a published article in Mr. Child's paper, went to the office, and in bitter, offensive language denounced Mr. Child, whose quiet, unruffled temper so increased the anger of his assailant as to provoke an assault. A violent blow across his shoulders from the cane of the angered man brought Mr. Child to his feet, when he seized his assailant and pitched him headlong into the street. He could teach his enemies to fear his strength and respect his opinions. But he by no means lacked magnanimity. He was warm hearted, socially attractive, sympathetic and benevolent, drawing to his side men of like instincts, whom he entertained by his wit and humor. But with all his natural excellences, his aims in life were prompted by higher impulses than mere natural instincts. The power of a Christian faith transformed the inner and controlled the outer life. His death in the meridian of life was a public loss, and sincerely mourned by his friends and those who knew his worth. An obituary notice at the time of his death, written by Rev. Dr. Samuel Hanson Cox, of whose church Mr. Child was a member, published in the New York Statesman, is a just tribute to his memory, and is worthy of preservation in this record:

DIED.—In New York City, on the 19th of March, 1827, after a distressing sickness of six months, Asa Child, printer, and formerly editor of the Montgomery Republican of Johnstown, N. Y. Mr. Child was in his forty-seventh year, and has left a widow and four children to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband and tender father. For fourteen years he had been a professor of the religion of Jesus Christ, in whom a deep sense of his own sinfulness and wants had brought him to trust as his Saviour and his righteousness. Mr. Child always evinced a low and abasing conception of himself. Self-distrust was a trait in his Christian character which resulted from an enlightened conviction of the perfidy of the human heart and of the real grandeur and excellency of a true disciple. In the first stage of his illness this dillidence seemed oppressive and painful, owing much perhaps to the nature of his disease and the medicines administered; but in its concluding scenes the prospects brightened for immortality. His mind rose by faith above the ruins it was soon to leave: it acquired calmness, confidence and hope in Jesus Christ our Lord. His bodily strength gradually wasted away, while his soul serenely waited for the signal of its release. He gently sunk into the embraces of death, without a struggle or a groan, in the spirit of submission and the consolation of hope: leaving to a large circle of relatives and friends a legacy, of all the most desirable and precious, the legacy of a Christian hope, a happy death-bed and a good name. "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Mrs. Dr. Jones, a daughter of Mr. Child, says:

He (Dr. Cox) not knowing the history of my father, did not give particulars of his life. I think my father with his brother William were in Solomon Southwick's office in Albany, N. Y. I well remember the time when politics were running so high in Governor Clinton's day. The Democrats had no press in Johnstown at that time, and were obliged to get their printing done at my father's office. And one night they went in and demolished the form that was ready for the press in the morning, and scattered the type in every direction. The excitement was so great, we trembled for my father's life. Judge Cady of Johnstown was one of the leading spirits of the Whig party, and was constantly upholding and defending the rights of the party to which he belonged; and I believe he was one of Governor Clinton's personal friends, as he was of my father.

The youth of Dr. Child gave promise of a future which was fully realized in the development of some of the most attractive and useful characteristics. Nature in the bestowment of her gifts upon him was not parsimonious. Inheriting the best qualities of intelligent and Christian parents, he commenced life under most favorable circumstances, which happily shaped his course in maturer years. Gifted with more than ordinary intellect, endowed with a disposition of peculiar sweetness, he readily secured warm and lasting friendships. His public life leaves record of his wisdom and Christian activities. A thorough education fitted him for positions in the higher spheres of life. At twenty-four years of age he was honorably graduated from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y. He at once entered upon his professional studies at the Baptist Theological Seminary, in Newton, Mass. The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by his Alma Mater.

His public service was commenced by his settlement as pastor of the First Baptist Church in Charlestown, Mass. Later he was installed over the Baptist Church of Framingham, Mass. Some years after, he became connected with the American Tract Society, as one of its officers. He was also connected with a widely circulated Baptist weekly journal, bearing the title of Watchman and Reflector, published in Boston, Mass. The varied experiences of Dr. Child gave to him that completeness of character which lacked nothing of attractiveness, and increased greatly his efficiency in his public career. His estimable wife, whose companionship contributed much to his domestic happiness, as well as his ministerial usefulness, says in a note to us, as indicative of the secret of his success in life: "My esteemed husband was characterized by an unusually genial temperament. He was gentle, affectionate and courteous. The Rev. Dr. Kirk of Boston, once spoke of him at a public meeting of the Tract Society, as being 'a sweet Child among us.' The expression was so appropriate it made me remember it. He encouraged the unfortunate, strengthened the weak, and caused many to admire the source from whence he drew his spiritual comfort."

Mr. Child bore the sobriquet of "Master Pans" for his prominence as a teacher at one time, he was a man of much native talent, and well educated for the times. He was influential, and esteemed for his personal worth, and justly intrusted with public offices. The following extract is from "H. Ammidown's Historical Collections:"

Rensselaer Child was largely engaged as surveyor and conveyancer over a circuit of country of considerable extent in that vicinity; and as the records will show, this class of business, for a number of years among the farming community, was monopolized by him; he was a man of large stature, and possessed more than the ordinary powers of intellect.

Levi Hart, D.D., of Preston, Ct., and granddaughter of the Rev. Joseph Bellamy, D.D., of Bethlehem, Ct., who d. May 12, 1832.

Hon. Asa Child was in stature six feet, of full habit and fine personal appearance. Descended from a stock talented and influential, his early life commenced with very favorable surroundings. Possessed of more than ordinary intellectual abilities, with a thorough education, he became prominent in public life.
He was graduated at Yale College, New Haven, Ct., in 1821, pursued his preparatory studies for the law in the office of Hon. Calvin Goddard of Norwich, Ct. He was prominent as a lawyer in Connecticut, afterwards in Baltimore, Maryland, and later in New York City. He held at one time the office of United States District Attorney for Connecticut, under the administration of President Jackson. He died at Norwich, Ct., May 11, 1858.

605. iv. HON. CALVIN GODDARD CHILD, second son and fourth child of Hon. Asa and Alice Hart Goddard Child, b. in Norwich, Ct., April 6, 1834, m. Sept. 16, 1858, Kate Godfrey, dau. of Jonathan and Elizabeth Hubbell Godfrey. Mrs. K. G. Child was born Dec. 12th, 1837. Residence Stamford, Ct.

The prominent positions occupied by Hon. Calvin Goddard Child, furnish ample proof of the confidence reposed in him as a public servant. His early surroundings were favorable to the development of the proper elements of character for success and usefulness in life. Graduated with honors at Yale College, New Haven, Ct., in 1855, he chose for his profession the law.
for which his taste and talents eminently fitted him. Since 1870 he has held the office of United States District Attorney for the State of Connecticut; receiving his first appointment from President Grant, and his present appointment from President Hayes.

As a citizen, Mr. Child has the respect and esteem of the community where his influence contributes largely to promote the moral and material interests of his adopted home.

594. ii. Peleg Child, second child and second son of Rensse laer and Priscilla Corbin Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., July 11, 1800, m. Sept. 16, 1829, Abigail Bullock. He died Oct. 20, 1861, on the old homestead of his father. Mrs. Child did not long survive him. They had only one child—an adopted daughter—who was an amiable and intelligent girl, and the light of their dwelling for many years, when the frosts of death cut down the flower in its full bloom, and filled their cheerful home with sadness.

Mr. Peleg Child was of a stalwart frame, whose avoirdupois would overleap two hundred pounds. In intellect he was much above mediocrity; was fond of reading, and well posted in matters of Church and State. He was specially interested in the politics of the country—a pronounced Democrat. Kinship was no barrier to his onslaught upon his opponents. He was remorselessly severe and unrelenting in his attacks upon men and measures opposed to his views. His neighbors were often entertained and amused when listening to the earnest debates on political questions between him and his brother, the Hon. Linus Child, who had as little sympathy with the Democratic party as Peleg had for the Old Whig, and later Republican. Both equally tenacious of their opinions, waxed warm as the discussion progressed, till both were ready to adopt the language of Macbeth,

"Lay on, McDuff, And damn'd be him who first cries, Hold! enough!"
The storm of words having expended itself, calm was soon restored in each breast, and fraternal relations remained undisturbed. Mr. Child was a valuable member of society, identified with all its interests. He resided on his father's homestead, north of Village Corners, in the town of Woodstock, and was a thrifty farmer.

595. iii. Hon. Linus Child, third child and third son of Rensselaer and Priscilla Corbin Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Feb. 27, 1803, m. Oct. 27, 1827, Berenthia Mason.

"Hon. Mr. Child passed his early years on his father's farm, with the usual attendance upon the public school. He began his preparation for College under the tuition of Rev. Samuel Backus of East Woodstock, and completed his preparatory studies at Bacon Academy, in Colchester, Connecticut, in the autumn of 1820. The following winter he entered Yale College, New Haven, whence he graduated in 1824. Mr. Child did not reach the highest rank in college as a scholar; but for honest, actual mastery of the prescribed course, few were before him. After he graduated, he became a member of the Law School in New Haven, and studied in the office of S. P. Staples, He was also under Judge Daggett's instruction. Six months later he became a student in the office of Hon. Ebenezer Stoddard, in the west parish of his native town, and after eighteen months' study there, was admitted to the bar in Connecticut. He spent a year in the office of Hon. George A. Tufts of Dudley, Mass., when he was admitted to practice in the courts of Worcester county, upon this he established himself in Southbridge, Worc. Co., Mass. He resided in Southbridge some eighteen years, during this period he was six times elected Senator from Worcester county to the State Legislature. In 1845 he removed to Lowell, and held the agency of one or two of the large manufacturing corporations of that city." 1 He possessed the unusual stature and frame of his father and grandfather, was cordial and genial in look and manner. Earnest in the promotion of all efforts for the public weal, and prominent in church and missionary interests, a member of the American Board of Foreign Missions. In 1862, Mr. Child removed to Boston, and resumed his professional duties, associating with him his son, Linus M. Child. Hon. Mr. Child died in Hingham, Mass., after a short illness, on the 26th August, 1870.

613. ii. Linus Mason Child, Esq., second child and only son of Hon. Linus and Berenthea Mason Child, b. March 13, 1835, m. Oct., 1862, Helen A. Barnes. Mr. Child graduated at Yale College, New Haven, Ct., in 1855, and is a lawyer in Boston, Mass.

We will preface a brief sketch of Mr. Child, having had no personal acquaintance with him, by saying, we have aimed in the compilation of this work, on the one hand, to avoid the charge of flattery, and on the other, to escape the suspicion of detraction. To place on record in a pleasing light every member in every branch, truthfully, is our pleasant office. From what one says and does, history is made, this is the basis of what we say of Mr. Child. From a late "Boston Herald," which has just fallen into our hands, (March 26, 1880) containing an argument by Linus M. Child, Esq., of Boston, before a Massachusetts Legislative Commitee, in support of a petition for a charter from the legislature for an elevated railway in Boston, may be gathered some elements of his character, which entitle him to be placed in our record in a pleasant light. From a cursory perusal of his argument, we are impressed with the fact that Mr. Child must have attained to a very commendable rank in his profession, to have been entrusted with matters of so much magnitude. His argument evinces a knowledge of facts which none but a close observer would have treasured up. His deductions are logical and forcible, while sound judgment, legal acumen, and broad financial views, are so clearly evinced as to entitle him to the confidence reposed in him by his clients. Descended from a stock possessing sturdy physical and mental qualities, and having enjoyed the best opportunities for mental culture, and with more than ordinary natural abilities, a failure to reach an enviable eminence, could hardly be looked for.

May 3, 1832, Henry Ingalls, who was born in Abington, Ct. They moved immediately after their marriage to Illinois, and reside now in North Branch Station, Chisago county, Minnesota. Their children were born in Illinois.

From a letter to me since my work of preparation commenced, from Mrs. Lavinia Child Ingalls, we give the following extract, which will interest many:

"My great grandfather, Ephraim Child, was one of seven brothers who emigrated from Roxbury, Mass., to Woodstock, Windham county, Ct. I think they laid out the town and located themselves in different parts of the same." [From other data we think the town had been surveyed and bounded.
—Ed.] "I have no dates that I can rely upon with regard to this early history. I will give to you from memory, what I have heard my father and my grandfather say. The town of Woodstock, where these stalwart men (we infer from other record, they were of large stature) and women, commenced their new homes, was seven miles long and five miles wide. It was no prairie country, the tall trees had to be leveled. These noble men and women were inured day by day to privations and hardships, and their children were trained to endurance, like the ancient Spartans. Notwithstanding their laborious duties, they did not neglect the education of their children. As soon as they got their own cabins tenantable, they built a cabin schoolhouse as near central as they could, and started a school for the winter months. The children who could make their way through the deep snows, boarded at home. Those who could not, boarded at the nearest uncle's. My grandfather used to tell me many reminiscences of those early days. My grandfather (Asa) and his brother Increase Child, were among those that boarded out (Ephraim Child, who married Mary Lyon, was their father.) The average number of boarders was from twelve to fifteen, and on stormy nights, the number increased to twenty or twenty-five. The "brindle" cow had not come in yet, and bean porridge and the brown loaf, were the supper and the breakfast, and potatoes roasted in the ashes for the dinner. A great round bowl that some of the most ingenious ones had dug out of a big log, that would hold a plump pailfull. was the common dish. As many boys and girls as could, gathered around this festive board, each with his wooden spoon, and when sufficed would give place to others. Thus were laid the foundations of a prosperous society;"

[Sixth Generation.]

645. i. DANIEL CHILD, eldest child of Stephen and Mercy Chase Child, b. in Cornish, N. H., Aug. 6, 1779, m. Appama Lyman, Nov. 11, 1804. She was the dau. of Josiah and Eunice Tiffany Lyman, and niece of Rev. Elijah Lyman, a well known clergyman of the Congregational church of that period. She was b. Sept. 15, 1783, at Lebanon, N. H., d. in Bethel, Vt., Sept. 21, 1854. He d. Jan. 7, 1853. They had nine children.

Daniel, with his brother Enos, early settled in the town of Bethel, Vt. When a young man he went to Brookfield, Vt., and started a mercantile business. After marrying, he settled in Rochester Hollow, Vt., as a farmer. Here he made a beginning in the wilderness. In the autumn of 1818 he moved to Bethel, Vt., where he lived until his death, in 1853. His place was the home of the Child family during his life. Mr. Child died very suddenly, dropping dead upon the street in Bethel village. He built the house on the home farm in 1827. Illustrative of the times, the contract for building the house was let to two parties for a specified sum, including what rum they could drink! Two of the boys were deputed to bring the rum from the village, which they did in an old-fashioned gallon measure, carried on a stick between them, making a trip almost daily! During his life in Bethel, Mr. Child was a man of some prominence in local public affairs. He was the clerk of the district in which he lived; clerk of the Episcopal church of which he was a member, and was very careful and methodical in making and preserving all the records with which he had anything to do. His care in these respects is specially noticeable, and it is owing to it that the town and church are now in possession of some valuable records of an early date. He was town clerk for some years. He was well known as a surveyor of lands in all these parts, and he knew better than any one else all the old land marks, in fact, his word came to be authority in all such matters; and the records of surveys, "notes" and "field books" which he left are even now appealed to, to settle the location of disputed corners and lines. He was careful to preserve all his papers, and when he died, left a large quantity which he had accumulated. The Woodstock: (Vt.) Mercury, used to be the local paper. Mr. Child was accustomed to visit the post office on each Friday, take the papers belonging to the subscribers in the north part of the town, carry them up to the church on Sunday morning, and before service scatter them through the pews for their respective owners. And so constant and regular was he in the performance of this duty, that it came to be associated in the mind of the postmaster as an inseparable part of Friday, and in the minds of the subscribers who received their papers in this way, an inseparable part of Sunday. It nearly answered the purpose of a calendar. 1

AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

658. iii. Dr. Abel L. Child, third child and eldest son of Daniel and Appama Lyman Child, b. in Rochester, Vt., Aug. 9, 1810, m. 1st, Oct. 3, 1833, Margaret Tosier, at Manchester, Ind., m. 2d, Dec. 25, 1847, Rebecca Coates, at Cincinnati, O., m. 3d, April 25, 1849, Eliza Hampton, at Munroe, O., m. 4th, Aug. 16, 1856, Cora Woodward, at Walnut Hills, O.

Dr. Child left Vermont in the summer of 1833, and commenced the study of medicine at Manchester, Ind.; thence he went to Cincinnati and attended lectures in the old Ohio Medical College, and afterwards practiced for several years in Indiana. In 1839 he left his profession and took charge of the Portsmouth, O., public schools, as superintendent. In 1848, he removed to Cincinnati and took charge of the Cincinnati High School (colored). In 1850 he became principal of the Walnut Hills High School. In the spring of 1857 he removed to Nebraska, bought land, and became a farmer, at the same time commenced metallurgic observations and reporting to the Smithsonian Institute. These observations are still continued, and reports made to the U. S. Signal Office. In 1867 he was elected a member of a constitutional convention of the state, and in 1869, elected probate judge of Cass county, which office he still holds (1880).

The experiences of Dr. Child have been in many respects most remarkable. His life has been one of great activity. Following the bent of an inquisitive mind, he has seen and known much of men and things. The natural force of character and versatility of talent which have marked his career have been important elements in reaching results. As a pioneer, future generations will read his history with interest and profit. His reminiscences of the town of Plattsmouth and county of Cass, in Nebraska, contained in a little pamphlet entitled "Centennial History of Plattsmouth City," &c., are instructive and amusing, exhibiting much of wit and humor in the author; and as a book of reference, will always be valuable. His indomitable courage and power of endurance are striking features in his history, and such as are always prime elements in pioneer life. Of boldness and daring in adventure, we have a thrilling illustration in a narrative from his pen, which we here insert:
A REMINISCENCE OF NIAGARA FALLS, OR, THE OLD INDIAN LADDER.

During a residence of several months at Niagara Falls, in the summer of 1832, much of my time was spent in wandering about, above, below and under the Falls, searching out the various grand views, recesses and curiosities of the vicinity. One morning in June I had descended the old spiral stairway to the foot of the American Fall, and after a time spent among the rocks and spray, was about to return, when a legend occurred to me of an old Indian ladder, said by some to exist, or to have existed in former times, by which ascent had been made from the river to the top of the cliffs above (some 200 feet), and to be located from one-half mile to one mile below the Falls. The existence of such a ladder had been disputed in my hearing several times by the oldest residents, and often sought for from the cliffs above by others as well as by myself, but nothing had been discovered indicating its existence.

The search from below on the river bank had not been attempted, as it was held to be impossible for a human being to pass down the river between the cliffs and water, as in places the rocks projected to the very margin of the rapid tumultuous torrent, and the portions where the solid walls receded were filled either with broken, jagged rocks or densely matted with thorny bushes and brush, living and dead, forming a barrier hardly penetrable to any animal larger than a squirrel or rabbit.

With but very little thought or consideration, I resolved at once to attempt the impassable (and search from below. I soon learned from sore experience that the difficulties of the path had not been magnified. It was indeed a fearfully hard road to travel. But I persevered till the certainty of the fearful track to be retraced, in case of retreat, overshadowed the possibilities of the advance. I therefore continued to press forward. At length, after, to me, a very long half mile's travel, I was rewarded with a sight of something like a ladder. It looked ancient and much decayed, many of the rounds broken out and gone. It was some 25 feet long, and stood with its top resting against a shelf or table projected from the face of the perpendicular wall, extending some fifty or sixty feet above it.

The ladder seemed weak and dangerous, and the rough and ragged rocks about its foot argued no pleasant bed in case of even a slight fall. But it was the ladder or retreat; and, with some hesitation, I took to the ladder. With bated breath—touching each round so carefully—changing from one side to the other, as the one seemed more decayed, or cracked under my weight, I slowly worked my way up. It was with extreme difficulty that I passed over the missing rounds, and off from two which broke under my feet without shocks and jars which might send the ladder and myself in a crash to the rocks below. But over all I reached the top and could then see that the shelf against which the ladder rested was from twelve to fifteen inches in width. To the right it decreased in width till, at some twenty feet distance, it disappeared. On the left it ran with unequal widths from ten to twelve inches, about the same distance, and was then lost behind a sharp angle of the rock. Escape to the right there was none; to the left—could I possibly succeed in reaching the angle? was there a path beyond? If not, why was this ladder ever placed here? The presumption was in favor of a passage, and I would try it. But to leave the ladder for an upright position on the shelf, as also to traverse this narrow ledge, with the perpendicular rock above crowding you off, when once on it, was a work of peril. A slight touch of the rock above might upset my balance, when nothing could save me from the ragged rocks twenty-five feet below. That every movement was calculated, timed and measured previous to actual motion, I need not say.

At length my feet rested on the shelf. And, then, as I gradually raised myself, a part of the shelf under my foot crumbled and fell. I also fell, with my face to the shelf. But in my struggle to save myself I pressed my foot so hard against the ladder that it was displaced, and with a terrific crash it lay in fragments on the rocks below, leaving me with all retreat utterly cut off. Completely exhausted and unnerved, I lay like one dead for several minutes, when the question of a passage around the angle of the rock occurred to my mind, and instantly rebraced every nerve and muscle. Cautiously I raised myself on to my hands and knees and crept along a few feet, till the shelf became so narrow that there was not room for both knees. Slowly and carefully I rose to my feet, grasping with thumb and finger ends upon the small projections, crevices, &c., of the rocks above me, and advancing one foot a few inches and then bringing the other up behind, as there was no room to pass one by the other.

Thus at last I reached the dreaded angle. But there, the light blazed out upon me. Around the angle, and a couple of steps, and I was lying at rest on a beautiful but slightly inclined greensward. Luxurious as my couch was, it was not devoid of thorns, as I could not forget that I had yet some one hundred and seventy-five feet more to climb, and some barrier must be interposed, somewhere, else this place would have been discovered from above. I noticed while lying here, for the first time, that my finger ends were badly cut, by the intensity of my grip on the rocks over my narrow path.

My anxiety increasing as to what I had still to encounter above, I arose and commenced my upward way. Evidently I was on a large slide of former days, arrested in its movement. On a very crooked track I found no difficulty in ascending to about twenty feet from the top of the cliffs, but here I met the apprehended barrier, in a solid perpendicular wall of about twenty feet. I followed this wall to the right till the slide joined it in a sheer descent of one hundred feet. No escape there. Then to the left with a like result, only fifty feet worse. The Old Bastile of France was not a safer prison. The remains of another old ladder, utterly decayed, showed how formerly travelers had ascended. But, hold, a ray of light produces a throb of hope. In the angle produced by the wall and slide on the left, grows a small white birch tree, with the roots inserted partly in the crevices of the wall, and partly in the earth of the slide. It rose some thirty feet, leaning from both the wall and the slide at an angle of some ten degrees, and over the fearful abyss below of one hundred and fifty feet. Its diameter at the foot was some four or five inches. Again, an old log of about one foot in diameter (but how long I could not see), projected from the slightly sloping bank above, the lower end nearly reaching the white birch tree, some eighteen feet from the root. Here was a bridge that a squirrel might pass over in safety, but could I?

My weight upon the tree must bear it down, and away from the end of the log, and probably out of reach of it, and suspend me over the terrible abyss below. No, no! I could never travel over that road. But, what then? What other resource? There was really no other way of escape from my prison, and to remain there, was only a long lingering death from starvation. I well knew that the road from the Falls, down the river to the whirlpool, passed a full half mile distant. It was a lonely, out of the way place, and hardly a chance of a human being coming within reach of the sound of my voice at any time. A full examination of all my resources, showed clearly that the only choice there was in the matter, was death by starvation, long and cruel, or a sudden, yet fearful one, on the rocks below. If I chose the latter, there was a barely possible chance of escape. The love of life was then strong with me, and the almost infinitely small chance for it, sent me to the foot of the tree. The small limbs were frequent, and up I climbed. My anticipations were realized. By the time I was up twelve feet on the tree, it had bent over so as to be entirely out of reach of the log above, and one glance into the fearful depths below induced such giddiness, sickness, and intense fear, that it was with the utmost difficulty that I held to the tree, as I hastened to the ground. I dropped to the earth in a dull, stupified despair. All hope was dead.

I have no recollection of any process of thought or reason. I knew nothing—but a sensation of after hopelessness. How long I lay in this state, I know not, time was forgotten. But at length I found myself upon my feet, and making for the tree again; why, or for what, I knew not. Simply as a machine I went to the tree, and recommenced its ascent. Devoid of all fear or nervousness, I reached the height of the log on the bank, now some three feet from my extended hand and arm. Next I found myself swaying the tree back and forth, to bring it within reach of the log—over and over, down and down I went toward that awful abyss, again and again before the reaction brought me within reach of the log. As I reached it, I threw my arm over it, and thus for an instant I hung. The recoil of the tree, assisted by my weight, was pulling upon my arm with a force it could not endure. At that instant a full consciousness of my position and its fearful peril broke upon me, and as full a sense that then and there was no time or place for thought or consideration. I let the tree loose, and with a desperate effort, threw my other arm over the log, and then, after two fruitless efforts, locked my feet around the log above my hands.

And then I felt that the log was slowly sliding down over the bank. Yes—it was surely going—I could feel it and see it move—it was all but over—that would be—annihilation. All fear, fatigue, and nervous weakness left me, I was at perfect ease. Time again utterly failed me. How long I was thus suspended I have no knowledge. But at last, I became conscious that the log had stopped. I could see where it had rubbed and ground along on the edge of the rock about a foot, and then caught on a knot. Then I tried to move myself up toward the bank, but found, suspended as I was, and with the inclination of the log (some ten degrees), I could not. I must get on top of the log—and I did so—but how I have no recollection. From thence I reached the bank and fell upon the grass. There memory ceased, and all was blank. As consciousness slowly returned, I began to realize that if I had a body, it was utterly dead. I was surrounded by the blackest of darkness, and could neither move or stir any member of my body, if I had one. By degrees I recalled the perilous scenes through which I had passed, and a somewhat indefinite conclusion followed that by some means I had fallen from the cliff, and that the body was dead.

But the old habit of controlling the body through the mind was still strong, and in my continued efforts in that direction, one of my hands fell from my body to the ground, producing a cold and wet sensation. This produced a shock and upset my conclusion as to my death, and I worked away more vigorously to get control over the body. In a few minutes, I so far succeeded as to find myself lying on the wet grass. With still further effort I found a log near by, lying much as I recollected the one did on which I reached the bank, and knowing that the higher end lay from the precipice, and in the direction of the road, I followed it on my hands and knees to the end, and then succeeded in getting on to my feet and started in the direction of the road.

After several mishaps, from contact with brush, stumps, trees, &c., and several falls, with the returning circulation, my sight also began to return. I began to see stars, but of course no sun. The day had passed and it was some time in the night. At last I found the road, and reached my boarding house at the Falls, at 2 o'clock a. m.

Soon after the birth of Asaph Bemis Child, his parents moved into Bethel, Vt., then comparatively new and wild, where he led a truly pioneer life. Asaph Bemis grew to be a stalwart boy by the exercise of his muscular powers in helping to bring into culture the new home. He came to be a power, ere he had reached the age of twenty-one, in clearing the farm and sustaining the household. At an early day the elements of a strong mind, and a robust constitution, began to be developed. While his hands were industriously and efficiently employed in the field, his leisure hours were spent in reading and study, till his knowledge of the primary branches of education was sufficient to qualify him to teach a common school. For several winters, while in his minority, he taught school, and returned to work on his father's farm in the summer. After reaching his majority, he spent two winters at the Academy in Randolph, Vt., boarding with his uncle, Judge Chase, Chief Justice of the State of Vermont; working for his board. So faithful and efficient was he, that his uncle declared he accomplished more than any other laborer on the farm, and that he was so studious he kept his standing in his class. Such was the force of character, and the unflagging mental application exhibited at this period, foreshadowing what the future would be in attainments and efficiency.

Having passed his twenty-second year, and acquired such knowledge as his limited means would allow, he commenced the study of medicine, and attended a course of medical lectures at Dartmouth College, N. H. Afterwards he attended a medical course in Boston, Mass., when he returned to Bethel, Vt., and read and practiced with Dr. Alfred Page of that town, and gained much favor among the people for skill and urbanity. To complete his medical studies he went to Burlington, Vt., and graduated, receiving his medical diploma from that institution. His thoroughness as a student cannot be questioned. But he was not satisfied with the medical practice. He went to Boston and connected himself with the office of Messrs. Ellis & Dana, leading dentists in that city. For two years he industriously applied himself, and became a skillful dentist. He then opened an office of his own, and proved himself to be one of the most popular dentists of the city. Naturally of a speculative turn of mind, he began at this period to write and publish articles on questions of public interest. His first dissertation was a treatise on the "Care and Preservation of the Teeth." These literary efforts led to the publication of a monthly magazine called The Athenaeum. He was much interested in the subject of education, and for some time was an active member of the Public School committee of Boston. He finally became much interested in the new philosophies and spiritualistic manifestations, so called. In support of these he was very earnest, and is thought to have made many converts.

The development of his philosophies is before the public, and the fruits will be judged of variously, as the opinions of men approximate to or diverge from his own.

775. i. Uriah Child, first child of Abel and Rebecca Allard Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Dec. 5, 1779, m. April 2, 1807, Polly Carpenter. Soon after his marriage he removed to Norwich, Chenango county, N. Y., and settled on a farm a few miles from the village of Norwich. He died July 4, 1812, leaving a wife and three young children. For several years, previous to his marriage, he was a school teacher; with some military aspirations, he held a captain's commission in a company of Infantry, which he supported with credit to his skill as an officer. At his death, Mrs. Child was left to cultivate the farm and care for the children. Being a woman of great energy, and possessing a vigorous constitution, under many discouragements, succeeded, in managing successfully the farm till her sons grew to manhood, and relieved her of much of her burdens. She died in Norwich, 1834.

[Seventh Generation.] Children:

783 i. Abel Child, b. in Norwich, Chen. county, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1807. He never married. He held the office of captain in a company of Infantry. He died Sept. 24, 1864.

796. i. Elizabeth Morse Child, eldest child of Stephen and Abigail Carter Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., 1813, m. by Rev. Thomas Boutwell, April 4, 1843, to Rev Lucien Burleigh.

This Burleigh family, into which Elizabeth Morse Child married, is one of such prominence, from their unusual ability and devotion to the great reforms of the day, we are glad their alliance to the Child name permits us to sketch them, briefly though it must be. Their lives are of such as we gladly offer the youth of our kindred for ensamples. Rev. Lucien Burleigh is the son of Rinaldo and Lydia Bradford Burleigh. Mrs. Lydia B. Burleigh was a direct descendant of Governor Bradford, who came to the new world with the first band of emigrants in 1620, on board the May-flower. Of the family of nine children given Mr. and Mrs. Rinaldo Burleigh, two died in infancy, the other seven attained mature years, six sons and one daughter. The physical development of these sons was so remarkable, they were sometimes termed "The thirty-six feet of Burleigh boys." The eldest son, John Oscar Burleigh, was born in Plainfield, Ct., where his father, who was a graduate of Yale College, was residing, being the principal of the Plainfield Academy. Mr. John O. Burleigh was educated at the Plainfield Academy, and at the Connecticut Literary Institute at Suffield. He became a teacher in the public schools of Killingly, Ct., Oxford and Brookline, Mass. While principal of the high school at Oxford Plains, he married Miss Evaline Moore, of that place. He had four children. The second child of Rinaldo and L. B. Burleigh, was a daughter, Frances Mary Bradford Burleigh, who married Jesse Arms and resided in Vineland, New Jersey. The third child was Charles Calister Burleigh. "He was a bright scholar at an early age; was fitted for college before he was twelve; commenced teaching when he was fourteen. He was admitted to the bar as a lawyer, in Windham county, Ct." At this time he gave promise of great brilliancy and distinction in this profession. For two years before his admission to the bar, in the years 1833 and '34, he edited the first anti-slavery paper in Connecticut. From a deep sense of duty, he gave up his legal aspirations, and devoted himself to the cause of the slave, which he plead with unequaled logic, and great eloquence, until the hour of emancipation. He then became a preacher and ministered to an "Independent Congregational Society" in Florence, Mass., a position he held for most of the remaining years of his life. He was injured by a passing train when at a railway station, resulting in his death ten days later. The highest testimony to his intellectual and moral worth, was rendered by his friends, Samuel May, William Lloyd Garrison, and other able men at the time of his decease. The fourth child in the family, was William Henry Burleigh; as a boy, possessed of a sunny, mirthful temper, which dubbed him the "rogue" in boyhood, and cheered and sweetened his manhood. With less academic training than his brothers, he made for himself, nevertheless, a place in the ranks of reformers. He became a printer and editor, and bravely and effectively labored in the temperance and anti-slavery causes. In 1837, he removed to Pittsburgh, Pa., and published there the Christian Witness, and later the Temperance Banner. The years of his residence in Pennsylvania, were busy, useful, honorable and honored. In 1843, he returned to Connecticut, and in Hartford edited the Christian Freeman, soon changed to Charter Oak. One who knew him well, and was capable of judging wisely, says of him: "He had few equals, and no superiors, as a writer, speaker, editor, poet, reformer, friend, associate: it was the universal testimony of those knowing him best, and esteeming him most truly, that he stood in the forefront of his generation." ¹

In 1849, Mr. W. H. Burleigh went to Syracuse, N. Y., in the employ of the New York State Temperance Society, as lecturer, secretary, and editor of their paper, which position he held five years. In 1855, he received the unsolicited appointment of harbor master from Gov. Myron H. Clark. In 1863, heavy afflictions came upon him, and the loss of father, wife, daughter and grandson in rapid succession, so told upon his health, he was speedily compelled to seek restoration in change of scene. Somewhat more than a year after, he was invited to attend a silver wedding in Syracuse; unable to be present, he sent the accompanying little poem of regrets:

"On this auspicious day, could all my wishes
That peace be yours, and happiness, and health,— Assume the varied form of silver dishes,
How would your tables glitter with their wealth.

But since no sprite can work this transformation,
I send my simple blessing in this rhyme;
With hearty love, and honest admiration
That still grows stronger with the passing time;

May the good angels evermore attend you
And make your days all beautiful and fair,
And since no other silver can I send you,
I send a lock of my own silver hair."

He passed away on the 18th March, 1871: John Chadwick said of him, at his funeral, "He loved everything, from rocks, woods, and waters, up to truth and God."

The fifth child of Rinaldo and Lydia B. Burleigh was Lucian, who married Elizabeth (or "Betsey") Morse Child; he was born in Plainfield, Ct., on the 3d February, 1817, and is yet living in the house where he was born. He studied for the ministry, and became a Baptist clergyman; he was, however, early inspired with the reformatory bias of his family. At sixteen years of age made his maiden speech, upon temperance, and years of his life have found him devoting time and talent to the promotion of this reform. In 1850, he became secretary of the "Society for the Suppression of Gambling." In 1854, he was again in his native place, engaged in teaching, much of the time, in the Plainfield Academy, of which institution he has published an extended history. For a number of years he has resided upon the ancestral farm, cultivating the soil, and acting as agent for the Conn. Temperance Union, also preaching when called upon.

The fifth son of this line was Cyrus Moses Burleigh, born in Plainfield, Ct., 8th Feb., 1820, dying at Sunnyside, Pa., 7th March, 1855. "Though ending life in the richness and strength of his mental manhood, the years he had lived were full of earnest, hearty toil for the amelioration of the colored race, for the release of the intemperate from the thraldom of vice, and for the advance of all efforts to uplift his fellow-beings." The last years of his life were spent in the State of Pennsylvania, editing the Pennsylvania Freeman.

The youngest of these sons was George Shepard Burleigh, who was born in Plainfield, in 1822; he is now in the full maturity of a noble physical and mental manhood, and is widely known as a poet of much strength and beauty of thought. Several years since he published in Philadelphia, Pa., a volume of poems, entitled, "The Maniac, and other Poems." At the time of the Fremont campaign he published a volume of poems, on incidents in the life of J. C. Fremont, called, "Signal Fires on the Trail of the Path-Finder." He has written many articles for periodicals, which would fill several volumes if collected. He married Miss Ruth Burgess of Little Compton, R. I., where he now resides.

Of the succeeding generation we say but a few words. There seems a remarkable development of artistic taste and talent, from which we may hope such good work, in the promotion of aesthetic culture, as the parents have wrought in reform.

[Seventh Generation.]

William Chandler is one of a family of ten children—nine sons and one daughter. His eldest brother, John Chandler, went as a missionary to India, in Oct., 1846, and has continued there till the present time. He has had nine children, two of whom have died; the others have received an education in this country: three married and returned to India—two as missionaries. Joseph Chandler, another brother of William, is a clergyman settled in Minnesota, and has had six children, three of whom are living. Augustus Chandler, the youngest brother of William, is a clergyman, preaching in Brattleboro, Vt., till compelled by failing health to relinquish his charge, and is now editor of a paper in Vermont. Of the two remaining brothers of William Chandler now living, one, Daman, is a farmer in Woodstock, Ct.; the other, Amasa, is the proprietor of a hotel on Woodstock Hill, Ct. He has four children: the two eldest are graduates from Yale College, New Haven, Ct. The sister of Mr. William Chandler married Royal Hatch of Stratford, Vermont, and has had nine children. The farm owned at the present time by Mr. William Chandler, has for several generations past been in the Child name. Mrs. Stephen Child came to this place on her marriage, and is still living, at the age of ninety-six. At the annual gathering at this ancient home on Thanksgiving days, four generations have been represented for several years past.

Henry Child was one of the ten of the name of Child, who took the Freeman's Oath on the transfer of the town of Woodstock, from the colony of Massachusetts to the colony of Connecticut. Very little written record has been left of his life. From tradition, he was esteemed as a man of much character.
and influence in Woodstock. The character of his descendants, of whom more is known, will certainly justify the opinion, that physically and intellectually, he ranked among the best class of citizens of that town. Immediately on his marriage, he went with his brother, Peter, from Muddy Brook, now East Woodstock, to the Northwest part of the town, known afterwards as the “English neighbourhood.” This part of the town was then mostly forest, and had been the hunting ground of the Indians, and the habitation of bears and other wild beasts; and still continued to be frequented by the Indians. This gave rise to many fears of the mother of these youthful pioneers, lest they should be eaten by bears or murdered by Indians. Henry and Peter located lots adjoining. Henry, after spending some years in a small cabin, erected in the year 1760, a commodious house which still stands in good condition upon the original site, owned and occupied by one of his descendants. This house Mr. Child kept many years as an Inn. Around this early home cluster interesting memories. It stood on the great thoroughfare from the Western settlements of the colony to the seaboard, and afforded shelter and rest to many a weary traveller. Often it became the resting place of the patriot soldier in his marches to and from the battlefield during the Revolutionary struggle, when the hospitalities of the patriotic landlord were unstintedly dealt out. Often the floors of the parlor, kitchen and barroom were covered for the night with sturdy soldiers. Sometimes it was used as a hall of justice. On one occasion an exciting trial of one Bugbee, who had headed a town riot, took place there. He resisted the legal authorities in collecting the town taxes. The trial ended in his conviction and punishment.

Of late years the quiet hospitalities of successive heads of families of the line have been cheerfully dispensed, and the frequent gatherings of descendants, to the fifth generation from the patriarch Henry, have kept alive the memories of the past. One, as memorable among them, was the gathering in honor of Capt. Willard Child, a son of Henry and successor to the homestead, which occurred in 1842, when the venerable father, then in his eighty third year, sat as priest amidst children, grandchildren and great grandchildren to the number of 130, pronouncing the coveted benediction upon the waiting and happy throng. The closing scene was one of song and thanks-

m. 2nd, about 1814, Mary Spring of Petersham, Mass. She d. in Woodstock, June 1, 1857. He d. in Woodstock, Ct. April 18, 1851. He held a captain's commission in a company of Infantry for many years. Like many others who are not born with a silver spoon in their mouth, he struggled hard through life to obtain it, without success. He possessed a kindly nature, full of good humor, and given to hospitality; so that his social life brought and conferred compensating pleasures. As a neighbor, none were more ready to confer friendly offices, and even to make sacrifices for the benefit of others. As an instance of pleasant humor, on one occasion his neighbor employed him to do a piece of work. When the job was finished, he received as compensation only the employers' thanks. Taking it all in good part, he spoke of it humorously, and frequently to his neighbors as a generous compensation, and as the first instance of prompt pay for his services since he had resided in the town. He was a whig in politics, patriotic in his feelings and a warm advocate for the emancipation of the enslaved colored race.

865. vi. Capt. Willard Child, sixth child and third son of Henry and Dorothy (Child) Child—she was the daughter of Nathaniel and Dorothy Johnson Child—b. in Woodstock, Ct., in the northwestern part of the town, known as the “English neighbourhood,” May 7, 1758, m. 1st, Jan. 10, 1781, Lydia Morse, dau. of Deacon Jedediah and Sarah Child Morse, and the sister of Rev. Dr. Jedediah Morse of Charlestown, Mass. The account of the Morse family as allied to the Child family, is fully treated in another place. Mrs. Willard Child was b. in Woodstock, Ct., June 22, 1759; she d. Dec. 9, 1792. He m. 2d, 1795, Sylvia Child, dau. of Capt. Elisha and Alice Manning Child of East Woodstock, Ct.; she was b. Oct. 28, 1762, d. 1824. Capt. Willard d. Nov. 1, 1844.

Capt. Willard Child was descended from a stock both intelligent and enterprising. He was also allied by marriage with intelligence and moral worth; consequently his surroundings were of a healthful and elevating tone. He belonged to a class of thoughtful and substantial men who gave character and dignity to the age in which they lived. Measured by the standard of intelligence, morality and practical Christianity of that age, which was by no means of an indifferent character, few men stood on a higher plane. He was prominent and influential in private and public affairs. His opinions were sought in determining difficult matters in church and state. His wisdom, probity and sagacity gave him deserved prominence among his fellow townsmen.

He lived in warlike times. At an early age his surroundings were such as to awaken patriotic feelings. The spirit of independence in governmental affairs in the colonies then prevalent was aroused in his own breast, and in the ardor of robust youth he enlisted in the service of his country, and served through the Revolutionary War.

Army life has its amusing incidents, as well as its more serious and trying experiences. The following anecdote was many years ago related to me by one of my grandfather's comrades: The hour of supper in the camp was approaching. The time had come for filling their pitchers with milk for the evening repast, from the cows in a field adjoining the camp. The owner of the herd kept a close lookout for the army boys. Aware of this fact, a roguish comrade fell behind his companions on the way, and paused while they filled their pitchers. As they were leaving the field, he stealthily approached within gunshot, and with an old root, resembling in the twilight a musket, took steady aim at young Child, and with the click of his tongue he aroused his attention—who seeing, as he supposed, the old farmer with his gun sighting for a deadly shot, started on the double quick for the camp. In great fright he reached his tent with an empty pitcher. Discovering that he had been made the victim of a joke, and taking it all in good part, he returned and obtained the needed supply of milk, and enjoyed a good supper as well as a good joke!

Benjamin Morse's father was Anthony Morse, of the first generation in America, and emigrated to America in 1635, and settled in Newbury, Mass.

Immediately on their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. David Morse removed from Woodstock to Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y., and settled on a farm in the southeast part of the town, where they lived till 1822, when they removed to Barrington, Yates Co., N. Y., where they both died—Mr. Morse Sept. 27, 1828, and Mrs. Morse in 1842. Mr. Morse was a man of unusual energy of character, sound judgment and executive ability, of sterling integrity and of decided Christian principles. He was a wise and affectionate father, and a kind husband. He was an earnest and consistent member of the Congregational church, and when his work was finished, died in the Christian faith, in the full belief of a glorious resurrection.

In his boyhood Dr. Morse enjoyed the advantages of a common school education, by which he was fitted for teaching in early youth: an occupation which he followed for several seasons, when he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Carr of Canandaigua, N. Y. Completing his medical studies, he entered upon the practice in Barrington, Yates Co., N. Y.; thence he went to Penn Yan, in the same county, where he gained more than a local reputation in his profession. After a number of years of successful practice in Penn Yan, he removed to Elmira, Chemung Co., N. Y. His success as a physician having preceded him, he readily secured an extensive and lucrative practice, extending over some fifteen years, at the close of which he died a happy death, much lamented by his family and a numerous circle of friends. A touching incident which occurred in his last hours is worthy of record. The Doctor had become much attached to a horse, which had for many years been his faithful servant, carrying him safely over rough paths and dangerous places, amid tempests of rain and driving snow-storms. That he might take a farewell look, and bid a final adieu to this noble animal, the Doctor directed him to be brought from his stall, after he had been neatly groomed, and to be led by the window of the room where he was lying. As the animal passed by and returned, the Doctor waived his white handkerchief and said, "good-bye, old friend." Dr. Morse was a thorough business man, as well as a successful practitioner, a conscientious Christian, an esteemed and useful citizen, a true and sincere friend.

He studied theology in Andover, Mass., and in Auburn, N. Y.: was licensed to preach by Windham County Association, Ct.; soon after settled over a church in Lima, Ind. Afterwards removed to Tyrone, Steuben Co., N. Y.: thence to Union City, Mich., where he held the pastorate of the Congregational Church for five years, when he was called to take charge, as principal, of La Grange Institute, Ind. During his connection with the Institute, he supplied destitute churches in the vicinity of La Grange as opportunity offered. A year and a half later he returned to Union City, and settled on a farm, where he has since resided, beloved by a large circle of friends. His Christian activities have not been relaxed. The Sabbath schools in Union City and feeble churches in the vicinity, have largely profited by his labors. The personal qualities of Mr. Morse have won for him many friends. Open-hearted, frank, and benevolent, he readily finds his way to the hearts of the people and commands their confidence and respect.
Mr. Morse has been twice married; first in May, 1843, to Sarah May Child, dau. of Deacon Luther and Pamela Child of Woodstock, Ct. She died in Union City, Mich., 1848, leaving no children. His second marriage was in 1858, to Caroline Lincoln (Hammond), widow of Samuel J. [Sixth Generation.]

910. vi. REV. WILLARD CHILD, D.D., sixth child of Capt. Willard Child, by Sylvia Child, (2nd m.) third son, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Nov. 14, 1796, m. Sept. 13, 1827, Katherine Griswold Kent, dau. of Rev. Dan and Betsey Griswold Kent, of Benson, Vt.  She was b. in Benson, Feb. 7, 1805, and d. Feb. 26, 1851.  He d. Nov. 13, 1877, 81 years of age.  He graduated at Yale College, New Haven, Ct, the year we are not able to state.

Dr. Child was a man of quiet and easy dignity; justly admired for his attractive personage.  In stature he was nearly six feet, possessing a fine physical development.  His muscular power in early youth was unusual.  In his school-boy days, he was the pride of his associates; he stood at their head as an athletic, and usually won the victory in warmly contested games.  In riper manhood, his strength was vigorously tested in resisting an attack by an insane man of great muscular power, which occurred on his father's farm on the occasion of one of his visits to the ancestral home, being suddenly attacked while in the field near his father's laborers, by the man alluded to.  The men were astonished at the ease with which the Dr. held his assailant, till he was bound with cords and rendered harmless.  There was a charm of great fascination about Dr. Child.  His large blue eye, beaming with the light of intelligence; his benignant countenance, and his deep and mellow voice, invested him with a power to win those who came within the reach of his magnetic presence.  The simplicity of his manners, his graceful and easy bearing, his sympathetic nature, his abounding good will, were elements of his power over men.  Buoyant, hopeful, rich in anecdote, he was always a welcome guest among friends and acquaintances. By his personal attractions, he drew to his side such as valued the instructions of a wise and intelligent teacher. His intellectual grasp was of high order. His native powers, which were of no ordinary cast, received a culture which gave him rank among scholars and statesmen.

As a public man, he was admired, honored and trusted; he was without ostentation and undue ambition. To his social nature all ambitious longings were subordinated. Life was much more to him in the quiet circle of appreciative friends, than in the glare of public fame. To serve the Master in humble private homes, in ministration to the sick and bereaved, was far more congenial to his feelings than to receive the adulations of an admiring, popular assembly; and his power to hold the attention of an audience was scarcely excelled. In pulpit oratory, in which he was by no means deficient, there was nothing of the florid and gushing method. Language, simple and direct, conveyed his thoughts to the conscience and the understanding of his audience with great effect. But the social element in Dr. Child was the secret of his success. His free and kindly manner with all classes gave him influence over men, and won to his confidence a large element in the community. Entering, as he readily did, into the sympathies of men in their varied pursuits and experiences, he easily touched the springs of their nature and drew them into sympathy with sentiments of high morality and christian obligation. Among the marked characteristics of Dr. Child, was his love of nature.

But the great work of his profession was paramount. His ministry was a prolonged one, covering a period of more than half a century. The obituary, written by one unknown to us, taken from the Congregationalist, briefly sums up the fields of his labors, and pays a just and beautiful tribute to his memory:

Willard Child, D. D., born at Woodstock, Ct., Nov. 14, 1796; graduated at Yale College and Andover Seminary; settled as pastor successively in Pittsford, Vt., Norwich, Ct., Lowell, Mass., and Castleton, Vt.; performing subsequently several years' ministerial labor in North Brookfield, Mass., Crown Point and Mooers, N. Y., and dying at the last named place Nov. 13, 1877 (lacking thus but one day of eighty-one years)—such are the chief outward facts of the history of a man affectionately remembered by all to whom he ever ministered in the gospel, or who came within the sphere of his personal acquaintance.
These mere facts give evidence of a long life and a varied and protracted ministry. He graduated from college and seminary at a younger age than is common, and he was able to fulfill some ministerial labor to within comparatively few months of his death. His, therefore, has been a service in our churches which, on the ground of its continuity and extent alone, is worthy of public notice.

But Dr. Child's ministerial service is not to be estimated by its duration only. Its quality was more marked than its continuance. Few, if any, men have brought into our Congregational service a richer nature than his. Whether looked at on its intellectual or emotional side: whether considered in respect to the extent and quality of its cultivation, or its various power to influence and touch other men, his was a spirit of unusual opulence of endowment.

And this large, rich nature was well habited in a singularly pleasing and commanding bodily presence. Indeed, when the present writer looks back twenty-five years, and calls up to his mind the tout ensemble of Dr. Child's presence, manner, voice, and substantial utterance, as he then remembers him in the pulpit, he is free to say that the whole was as near perfection as he has ever known.

His felicity of expression, his aptness of quotation, his delicacy of allusion, betrayed a familiarity, quite unusual in even our most cultivated clergy, with the whole range of general literature, and especially its poetic department. He was in truth a poet, without the habit of verse. Yet his preaching wanted nothing of the vigor and manliness more common to natures less refined.

With such qualifications, it is not surprising that Dr. Child should have been a widely admired preacher. Yet unquestionably a wider and more enduring repuette would have belonged to him had he been a more ambitious man, and not as easily contented with the satisfactions of friendship and of books as he was. He lacked something of that strenuosity which was necessary to bring out the best possibilities of his reputation.

But to himself, and to his immediate acquaintance, any such loss may well have been made good by the enjoyment given and received in that social intercourse, which was at once a pleasure and a power. Through this channel went out from him not a little portion of his best efficiency in helping others. And by it hundreds who have known him will remember him affectionately and long, as one of the most attractive and inspiring men and ministers they have ever met.

His remains were brought from Mooers to Pittsford, the scene of his earliest ministry, and buried beside those of his earliest friends:

"Among familiar names to rest,
And in the places of his youth."

[Seventh Generation.]

1015. i. Willard A. Child, M.D., eldest child of Rev. Dr. Willard and Katharine Kent Child, b. in Pittsford, Vt., Sept. 16, 1828, m. March 26, 1863, Emma Knapp, dau. of Abel Knapp, Esq., of Mooers, Clinton Co., N. Y. Esq. Knapp went to Mooers at an early day and established himself in the mercantile and lumber trade, which he still successfully pursues.

Dr. Willard A. Child was graduated at the Medical College at Castleton, Vt., in 1857, and commenced his practice in the town of Mooers, N. Y., afterwards removed to Pittsford, Vt., his native town. Previous to his medical course he made several sea voyages, one of which was around the world. At the breaking out of the civil war, Dr. W. A. Child was the first in the town of Pittsford, Vt., to enroll for volunteer service in the Union Army. He was immediately appointed assistant surgeon in the 4th Volunteer Regiment of Infantry of Vermont. At the expiration of the three months' service he returned to his home, but soon after went back to the army, and was again appointed assistant surgeon of the 4th Regiment. Shortly after he was promoted to surgeon in the 10th Vol. Reg't, Vt., then to brigadier surgeon, and finally to the post of division surgeon, and served through the entire war. He performed the first surgical operation on the field, which took place at Big Bethel. His army record is a highly honorable one. He was in twenty-eight or twenty-nine battles. After his marriage in 1863, his wife was with him during the greater part of the remaining campaign, rendering sympathy and aid to wounded and dying soldiers. At the close of the war, Dr. W. A. Child resumed his practice in the town of Mooers, N. Y., where he spent the balance of his life. His health was impaired by exposure in the camp, and his days were much shortened in consequence. His professional life was a busy one, and one which secured him flattering regard among his patrons. Dr. W. A. Child was talented and well educated. His opportunities for general knowledge were unusually favorable and well appropriated. He formed intelligent opinions from observation and reading, which made him at home among literary as well as business men. While he possessed the characteristics and qualifications that fitted him for manly duties in his profession and as a citizen, the finer feelings, developed only in the sanctuary of the domestic circle, were not lacking. His love for his revered and aged father prompted the tender ministries which filial affection only can supply. The last years of his father were spent in his family, where he enjoyed the attentions and loving sympathies of a dutiful son, and not less self-sacrificing and cheerful ministrations of a much loved daughter-in-law, whose devotion could not have been more earnest and loving in an own child. It was in his last sickness only that Dr. W. A. Child learned of our enterprise of publishing a Genealogy of the Child Family. In a communication from his surviving companion, which was received soon after his decease, she informed me that her husband expressed much interest in the success of the work, and that it had been his purpose to contribute some incidents and experiences in his own history,—a failure which we sincerely regret.

34. viii. Capt. Elisha Child, eighth child and fourth son of Ephraim and Priscilla Harris Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Feb. 11, 1725, m. Jan. 6, 1750, Alice Manning, who was born 1728, d. 1798. He d. Nov. 22, 1796.

Captain Elisha Child was a man of strong character and much intelligence, and was everywhere prominent in affairs of town, state and church. A man of quick perceptions, cool and accurate judgment, withal of that kindly spirit which wins and retains firm friendship. His abilities found ready recognition, and he held various offices of responsibility and honor most creditable to himself and fellow citizens. Capt. Child represented the town of Woodstock in the General Court of the Colony of Connecticut for several terms. The patriotic enthusiasm of the people of this town, kindled with the first watch-fires of the revolution.

"At a very full meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Woodstock, legally warned and held at said Woodstock, on the 21st day of June, A. D. 1774, Nathaniel Child, Esq., was chosen Moderator. The resolves of the House of Representatives were presented by a committee of this corporated body, for their consenting to and voting the above resolves, in conjunction with the other representatives of this Colony, in General Court assembled. As said resolves do honor to the worthy representatives of a free, loyal and virtuous people, are very expressive of the sentiments of the inhabitants of this town, and by them judged necessary in such a day as this, when we have the most convincing proofs of a fixed and determined plan of the British administration, to overthrow the liberties of America and subject these colonies to a bondage that our father's did not, would not,—and fled into the wilderness that they might not—and God grant that we, their posterity, never may—bear.

2ndly. Being animated from the consideration of the absolute importance of adopting every rational and probable means in our power for the political salvation of our country, we engage to contribute our utmost exertions in defence of our American liberties and privileges, and stand ready to join our brethren in this and the other American colonies in every possible measure that may influence Great Britian to withdraw her oppressive hand; at the same time we apprehend that a General Congress consisting of delegates from each colony on the Continent is necessary, speedily to be formed that the sentiments of the whole may be known and such an unity in measures be established as may constitute a strength invincible by tyranny, and break out in one general burst against the attempts that are made and making to destroy the Constitution of these Governments.

3rdly. And inasmuch as the promotion of industry, frugality, economy, arts and manufactures among ourselves is of great importance to the good of a community, we determine from this very day to live as much within ourselves, and purchase as few British goods, wares, and merchandise as possible, and give all due encouragement to every useful art among us.

5thly. Voted, that a copy of these votes be printed in the New London Gazette, to manifest the deep sense we have of the parliamentary invasion of the constitutional rights of British America.

Attest. ELISHA CHILD. Town Clerk.
On the requisition of the Continental Congress, troops were raised in all the colonies. Connecticut was prompt to furnish her quota. Capt. Elisha Child was placed in command of one of the first companies organized. On the news reaching Connecticut of the rencontre at Lexington, Mass., Woodstock sent several companies, one under Capt. Child, also one under Capt. Benjamin Lyon, one under Capt. E. Manning, one under Capt. Daniel Lyon, and a troop of horse under command of Capt. Samuel McLellan.

We first find Capt. Elisha Child recorded as a member of the General Court in the Session of 1775, when Jonathan Trumbull was Governor, and Mathew Griswold Lieut. Governor. During this Session, "Capt. Elisha Child, Col. Samuel Chapman, Capt. Henry Allyn, Joseph Hopkins, and Mr. Isaac Doolittle were appointed a committee severally or in conjunction, to search after lead mines in the colony, and directed to inform the Governor if any were discovered, that the Governor might inform the Continental Congress in the summer session of 1776."

At the same meeting of the General Court, we find Capt. Child and others were added to a committee previously appointed "to procure fire-arms, and gun locks to supply the State Militia in the war."

Mr. Child has been a successful farmer in this parish for many years—a citizen esteemed for his probity of character—of clear and discriminating judgment in all practical matters, whose influence has always been found on the side of right: an early and persistent supporter of the temperance reform. His patriotism placed him in the foremost ranks of his country's helpers when threatened with domestic invasion; and without a murmur he surrendered to the uncertainties and dangers of warfare, the son on whom he was relying for support in his waning years. Ninety years of life have been given him, not in vain.

Mrs. Child, inheriting the characteristics of parents remarkable for intellectual strength and physical vigor, to which are added excellent qualities of heart not less inherited, of pleasing and commanding personal appearance, lives in the midst of a large domestic circle, a central figure, surrounded by children and grandchildren, ministering in kind and motherly offices to all around her. Our recognition of her as a cheerful and efficient helper in our work, is noticed elsewhere. They reside in East Woodstock, Ct.—Mr. Child in his 91st year, and Mrs. Child in her 89th year.

Capt. George W. Child had the honor of serving his country in the Union army in the late war of the rebellion. He raised a company of infantry in his native place, over which he was appointed captain. He was in several engagements and showed himself worthy of his honors. He came out unharmed and returned at the close of the war to his home and his farm, which he found quite as congenial as the strife of battles.

[Sixth Generation.]

Mr. Child was a thrifty and skillful farmer in East Woodstock, Ct. In stature he was six feet, and of stalwart frame, with somewhat florid complexion; a man of correct and sober habits. Like many of his kinsmen bearing the Child name, he was tenacious of his own opinions, acting from his own convictions rather than upon the opinions of others, a trait of character to be commended when based upon enlightened views; never yielding a point to please one differing from him in opinions. Such an one must necessarily make his way through the world by warm encounters with opponents, but with the approval of friends.

Mr. Child was the successor of his father, Dea. Charles Child, to the ownership of the old homestead, the fourth generation from the original owner, Ephraim Child, who came from Roxbury, Mass., to Woodstock about 1710. Mr. Elias Child belonged to the old school class of men, who feel that the former days are better than the present, and he was not easily drawn into any reforms or changes of the present day. He was a laborious and thrifty farmer when in his prime, and left a handsome property to his only child, John H. Child, who succeeds to the ownership of the old homestead, now in possession of the fifth generation from Ephraim Child, the first occupant.

Mr. Child is descended from a vigorous and robust stock physically and mentally, is well developed, standing six feet, of good proportions, of florid complexion of regular and comely features, wears a countenance full of vitality, and vigor marks his movements. He is a prosperous jobber in dry goods at No. 87 Worth St., New York City.

The genealogy of Mrs. Child was written by her little daughter of twelve years, at my request, whose sweet little note it is our pleasure here to insert:

New York City, Nov. 8, 1879.

Dear Mr. Child,—I received your letter, and I am very sorry I have not answered it before. My great-grandmother's maiden name was Emily Hollister. She first married my great-grandfather, Mr. Strickland, and on his death, Mr. Savage. My grandmother's maiden name was Emily Malvina Strickland; she married my grandfather, Philemon F. Robbins, who is still living. My mother's maiden name was Emily Malvina Robbins: she married my father, Harris Child, and my name is Emily Robbins Child. The last time we sat down at the same table together was at a Thanksgiving dinner at Hartford, Ct., at my grandmother's, in 1873. My great-grandmother was hale and hearty as ever. She died in 1874, and my grandmother in 1877.

From your little friend,
Emily R. Child,

Parker and Hannah Huse Morse. She d. 1786. He m. 2d, March 18, 1790, Sophia Morse, dau. of Doct. David and Anna Newman Morse, a niece of his first wife. She d. Feb. 28, 1826. Those interested in the genealogy of the wives of Capt. Elias Child, will find it more fully treated in connection with David Morse, who married Hannah Child, (No. 906) dau. of Capt. Willard Child, on page 179, and in connection with No. 1480, where the marriage of Sarah Child to Jedediah Morse, Esq., first allies the two families afterwards so repeatedly linked.

It may be noticed that military titles are often affixed to the names of men who lived in colonial times. The title meant something in that period—for those who bore it were in actual service, or in training as minute men, liable to be called to the field at any moment. They were patriotic men, ready to peril life and property in defence of American liberty. We are, therefore, particular to give the title as handed down to us in the record. Capt. Elias Child was the son of a man in whom the Colonial Government reposed confidence for his abilities and his devotion to the American cause. This son partook largely of his father's spirit and his ideas, and bore some of his father's honors. Less in public life than his father, because the fruits of the Revolution were being quietly enjoyed he was content with less military honor, and more absorbed with civil pursuits. Capt. Elias Child ranked among the best of citizens, and was recognized by his neighbors as a man of sound and discriminating judgment, and upright in all his business transactions. He was known in his time as a properous and wealthy farmer, a warm supporter of moral and religious institutions, and was a consistent member of the Congregational Church. He died April 3, 1834:

As the accredited compiler of this genealogy it will not be deened an offence against good taste, if in this connection I adopt the use of the first person while chronicling my father and family. In opening correspondence for this genealogy my name to many was unfamiliar: by others, while familiar, it was not readily traced to its legitimate branch. It will possibly gratify an innocent curiosity if I introduce the reader to my immediate ancestor.

My father Elisha Child, son of Capt. Elias Child, of North Woodstock, Ct., was among the early settlers (about 1805) in the town of Exeter, Otsego County, N. Y. My earliest recollections place me in a sparsely settled neighborhood composed mostly of New England people. The pioneers of the town were the Tunniclifs and the Herkimers; soon after the Cushmans, Williamses, Brookses. Curtisses and the Summers; then the Childes and the Morses. My father and my uncle, Charles Thompson Child, and David Morse, their brother-in-law, came very nearly together. These later pioneers were from Connecticut. To them the school house and the house of worship were of the first importance. Thus early were laid the foundations of a moral and Christian community. These fathers and their children constituted a substantial society, observant of religious institutions, and zealous promoters of all enterprises that promised permanency and prosperity. My father was reared a farmer and continued to cultivate the soil during his life. In stature he was six feet high and well proportioned, of fine personal appearance and bearing, of sanguine temperament, of a well balanced mind, of sound judgment, of good executive ability, of strict integrity, and a sincere Christian. He was a man of average intelligence for the times and was held in much esteem by his neighbors and acquaintances for his manly bearing and stability of character: and was often the arbitrator in church and secular differences. His excellent musical abilities rendered his position in church affairs one of much importance. As my father passed away before I was of sufficient age to fully appreciate his characteristics, I write the account as given by those who were cotemporary with him, and some of whom were intimately associated with him in the affairs of life. It will not be out of place to mention a pleasing incident which occurred some few years since. On the occasion, I was brought into company with an intelligent and leading citizen of one of the towns adjoining my native town, (myself a stranger to him) who was an intimate associate of my father. Incidentally our family name was mentioned, but in no way to indicate that I bore the name. The gentleman remarked that in earlier life (he was now quite aged) he had "had a very pleasant acquaintance with Elisha Child, of Exeter; he was a superior man and one who was highly esteemed as a citizen." As the compliment was paid to the memory of my father, in ignorance of my relationship, I have ever cherished it with peculiar satisfaction.
My mother, Nancy Child, was the eldest child of Capt. Willard and Lydia Morse Child. Her mother was the sister of Rev. Dr. Jedediah Morse, the great American Geographer, who was the father of Samuel F. B. Morse, LL. D., the inventor of the "Morse Telegraph." She was in stature somewhat above the average of her sex, of fair complexion and comely features. Her younger brother, the late Rev. Dr. Willard Child, once said to me, "your mother when a young lady was in my youthful eye the perfection of a beautiful girl." Her characteristics were such as might be looked for in a descendant of a good family of Puritan stock. She was marked with much strength of intellect; her intelligent ideas upon matters of church and public interest are found in her diary, which for many years she was accustomed to keep. The religious element was prominent in her character. The education of her family in high, moral principles, with a view to meet the practical duties of life, was to her a matter of first importance. Her children cherish her memory with warm affection, veneration and gratitude, for her tender and faithful devotion to their happiness and usefulness in life. Some years after my father's death she married Dea. Dudley Child, of Bath, N. H.

[Eighth Generation.]

1359. i. Mary Ann Child, eldest child of Parker Morse and Sabrina Robinson Child, b. in Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y., Feb. 4, 1825, m. Nov. 13, 1844, Henry Hatch Curtiss, son of Abel Curtiss, an early settler in Otsego County, N. Y. Mr. Curtiss came to Utica nearly forty years ago, and established himself in the printing business, which he has successfully conducted till the present time, now the head of the firm of Curtiss & Childs. He is among the most respected citizens of the city, and has long been an esteemed and efficient elder in the Westminster Presbyterian church of Utica. He has been twice married. His first wife dying Aug. 6, 1849: he m. 2d, Oct. 16, 1850, Mary Burt Cooley, dau. of John and Sabra Cooley, of Longmeadow, Mass. She was b. Oct. 10, 1814. and d. March 12, 1879.

Jan. 13, 1853, Anna Jane Tapping, dau. of Isaac and Jane Tapping, of Utica, N. Y. Having acquired his trade, Mr. Childs first established himself in business in Boonville, N. Y., becoming the editor and publisher of the Boonville Herald, a local paper in the interest of the old Whig party. After several years continuance in this connection he disposed of his interests in Boonville, and established a business in Utica. Four years later he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Henry H. Curtiss, where they have built up and still conduct a prosperous business. Commencing with but little capital, except a thorough knowledge of his trade, Mr. Childs has risen to the status of a successful and popular business man; having the public confidence for his thoroughness and unswerving integrity.

[Ninth Generation.] Children:

1364. i. CHARLES PARKER CHILDS, b. in Utica, N. Y., Oct. 10, 1854, d. July 30, 1862. 1 Mr. L. C. Childs adopted the terminal (s.)
New York, on the 3d September, 1806. Has been three times married, first marriage on the 29th August, 1831, by Rev. Dr. M. L. Perrine, Prof. of Auburn Seminary, to Melissa Hollister. Second marriage on the 11th of May, 1833, by the Rev. Chauncey Goodrich, to Sylvina Thorp. Third marriage by Rev. J. P. Cleaveland D. D., on the 16th October, 1867, to Susan P. Cleaveland.

Mr. Child's first wife, Miss Hollister, was the daughter of Roswell and Esther Guernsey Hollister, of South Ballston, Saratoga Co., N. Y. Possessed of an unusually attractive face, her large, soft, dark eye, and broad brow, betokened the sweetness of disposition, and strength of intellect, which especially characterized her. Even at the time of her marriage, her health was impaired by pulmonary difficulty, and her wedded life was very brief, after the birth of an infant, who did not survive her. Mrs. M. H. Child died in Tompkins, Delaware Co., N. Y., on the 18th of July, 1832. Miss Thorp, the second wife, was the daughter of Edward and Sylvina Tremaine Thorp, of Butternuts, Otsego Co., N. Y. Inheriting from her father a strong love for reading, and fine intellectual abilities, Miss Thorp had a highly cultivated mind, and entered upon the life of a clergyman's wife, with unusual qualifications to fill the position. Notwithstanding many cares and occupations, Mrs S. T. Child found always time for reading; indeed, she ever preferred a book or her pen to society, though possessed of rare conversational powers. Mrs. Child left in manuscript some fine products of her ready pen. Her death occurred in New York City, on the 5th of October, 1865.

The third wife is the daughter of Rev. Dr. J. P. and S. H. D. Cleaveland. Dr. Cleaveland was a clergyman of the Presbyterian church; settled first in Salem, Essex Co., Mass., and from thence removed to Detroit, Michigan. While in Michigan he was connected as President with Marshall College, afterwards, we believe, merged with the University at Ann Arbor. Later Dr. Cleaveland was settled in Cincinnati, Ohio, and Providence, R. I. At the time of the late war, Dr. C. became chaplain of a regiment of the Gulf Squadron. Dr. Cleaveland died at his home in Newburyport, Mass., on the 7th of March, 1873.

Mrs. S. P. Cleaveland Child was educated under the careful supervision of her father, and at the Ingham University at Le Roy, Genesee Co., N. Y., and at Andover, Mass., in the Abbott Female Seminary. Her signature has become familiar to many of the name, as the amenuensis of her husband in the preparation of this genealogy.¹

¹ Mr. Elias Child was early consecrated by his parents in baptism, and as was so often the custom of New England families, dedicated to the ministry should his spirit thus incline him with increasing years. With this in view, he was sent to fit for college at an academy in Stockbridge, Mass. Here he was encompassed with the best possible influences for mental and moral growth. Boarding in the family of the parents of Prof. Hopkins, his room-mate was the "Bob" Hopkins of boyhood, who became in after years the honored Prof. Hopkins of Williams College. The society of this town was composed and controlled by the New England aristocracy of cultured refinement; the influence of which was felt by young Child, and never forgotten. During this period of preparatory study, Mr. Child's father died, and henceforth he knew little of home. He entered Union College, Schenectady, in 1824, graduating in 1828, under the presidency of Eliphalet Nott, D. D., and went soon to the Theological Seminary at Auburn, N. Y., where he studied with the Rev. Drs. Richards, Mills and Perrine, men eminent in their denomination. Mr. Child was settled in two parishes of his native state, from whence he removed to Michigan, being called to Albion, Calhoun Co. A very earnest and studious man, he devoted himself to his profession, and was considered a chaste and able sermonizer. Enthusiastic by nature, he became early in life the zealous friend of the slave, at a period when such friendship was not popular. A bronchial difficulty resulted in a withdrawal from the active service of the ministry. Business life has been intermitted by the superintendency of two charitable educational institutions, the only links to the early professional life, which his reverence for the office would permit. Excellent natural abilities are shrouded by an extremely modest estimate of himself, arising in part from a proud

He m. 2d, July 5, 1866, Mary Augusta Thorp, dau. of Hon. Henry and Mary Buckley Thorp, of Butternuts, N. Y.

Passing the period of childhood and early youth with the ordinary educational advantages obtained in common schools of that period, Mr. Child commenced business as a clerk in a country store. After a term of service in this capacity, he purchased a part interest in a line of stages, with U. S. mail contract. Later he became connected with a cotton manufacturing business in Oaksville, Otsego Co., N. Y. After several years in this connection, he disposed of his interest and turned his attention to farming, connecting it with the produce commission business. He has for thirty years been a resident of Oaksville, Otsego Co., N. Y. Possessing good business talents, he has shared the public confidence in the several official positions, entrusted to him in town and county. He held for many successive years the office of post-master; for six years he was R. R. commissioner for the town of Otsego, N. Y.; for several years one of the Directors of the Cooperstown and Susquehanna R. R.,—and for many years he has been an officer of the Otsego County Agricultural Society. In all public interests relating to district, town and county affairs, he has always been a cheerful and liberal supporter.

Mr. Charles Child adds the (s.)
Mr. Child early made his home at North Woodstock, and in mature manhood settled on the farm where he now resides. A staid and thoughtful man, his position has been an honorable and useful one in town and church affairs. The office of deacon in the Congregational church in North Woodstock, he has for many years faithfully and acceptably maintained. His chosen life-long companion is among the best loved of her sex, for her many amiable and excellent personal qualities. Her musical endowments have enlarged the circle of her friends and made her for years an essential element in the choir of the Congregational church. The rare Christian grace of loving devotion and self-sacrifice to aged parents and kinsfolk, illumined their later days and secured the gracious promise of the fifth Commandment.

Mr. Child went to Woodstock in his early boyhood, where he has since resided. On reaching manhood, he established himself in business as a wheel-wright, but later as a farmer, an occupation better suited to his taste and genius. Interested and active in the material interests of parish and town, his influence is salutary and efficient. Mrs. Child was a successful teacher before her marriage; her untiring energy of character and earnest resolution to educate her children, has enabled her to triumph over delicate health and accomplish marvels. She justly draws from us our warmest esteem and gratitude for her cheerful and indefatigable efforts to advance our work. Intelligent, thoughtful and energetic, she has been quick to comprehend and supply needed information.

[Eighth Generation.] Children:
1387. i. Esther Simpson Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct. Jan. 25, 1842. With great energy and success has devoted herself to teaching.

1357. x. Horatio Henry Child, seventh son and tenth child of Elisha and Nancy (Child) Child, was b. in Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y., 16th of July, 1820, m. 7th of August, 1849, Betsey Brand, dau. of Samuel and Sally Brand, of Leonardsville, Madison Co., N. Y. She was born May 15th, 1822, in Leonardsville.

Mr. Child had naturally a mechanical genius, and was engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements. After several years of earnest application in this calling, failure of health necessitated a change; when with characteristic enthusiasm, he established himself in the insurance business, in which he is now employed, in connection with a commission agency in produce. He is of sanguine temperament, of earnest purposes, fond of reading, interested in the passing events of the day, holds positive and distinct opinions upon political and religious matters. He is esteemed as an honorable and worthy citizen of Leonardsville, N. Y., his present residence.

[Eighth Generation.] Children:
1394. i. Arthur Child, b. in Leonardsville, N. Y., May 14, 1850, d. Aug. 2, 1870. He was an amiable, bright and intelligent youth; in a course of education for the legal profession, when he was attacked with malignant fever, which in a few days terminated his life.

1395. ii. Frank Samuel Child, b. in Leonardsville, N. Y., May 20, 1854.
Rev. F. S. Child inherited a somewhat fragile constitution, with the general mental characteristics and tastes of his mother. Fond of his book from early childhood, the quietude resulting from not vigorous health, was happily spent in reading. Every available book was devoured, and fortunately the love for a desirable class of literature was formed, leading to the decided penchant for belles-lettres which appeared in his student life. Mr. Child fitted for college at the Whitestown Seminary in Oneida Co., N. Y., where he graduated in 1871. He entered Hamilton College, Clinton, N.Y., graduating in the class of '75, with a most honorable standing. He graduated from Union Theological Seminary in 1878. In January, 1879, Mr. Child was installed pastor of the Congregational church in Greenwich, Ct., his present charge.

[Sixth Generation.]

Soon after their marriage they removed from Woodstock to Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y., and settled on a farm, where they spent the balance of their days, and where their children were born and reared to manhood and womanhood. Mr. Child was a man of a most kindly nature, of genial temperament, fond of his friends, of untiring industry, noted for his probity and conscientiousness in all his business transactions; a supporter of all useful reforms, and a devout christian. With a life-long companion in full sympathy with him in domestic, social and religious life, the mother of thirteen children, twelve of whom grew up to manhood and womanhood under her sweet maternal influence, and settled in life.

Mr. Child evinced a love of books, and very early resolved on obtaining an education that should fit him for professional life. His mature youth was devoted to school teaching. Later, he entered Oneida Institute at Whitesboro, N. Y., where he continued for some years, acquiring a fair education, and graduated in 1841. He then pursued a course of theological studies under the late Rev. Beriah Green. He became thoroughly imbued with the views of his teacher on questions of slavery, then agitating the country, and identified himself with the party that held no church fellowship with slaveholders or their sympathizers. With characteristic earnestness and sincerity, he sought to bring public sentiment to his views. The success of the party was not great. Though licensed as a clergymen, his public services in his profession were brief. Failure of health made it necessary for him to seek other employment, and after a brief residence in Whitesboro, N. Y., in secular pursuits, he removed to Oneida, Knox County, Ill., where he now resides, acting as reporter for a weekly paper in Galesburg, Ill., and cultivating and adorning his beautiful home. His life has been marked with usefulness in the community where he resides; and his upright and conscientious course has won the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. A Christian mother's training in his childhood has largely shaped his moral feelings, and given him the deepest abhorrence of immoralities of every kind. Not long since he wrote me that a profane word had never escaped his lips, that the remembrance of one rough word, not profane, to an elder sister, when a small boy, always gives him pain.

Feb. 16, 1874; m. 3d, June 18, 1876, Nancy Dixon, who was b. March 7, 1846, in Bloomington, Grant Co., Ill.

Passing his boyhood, without special incident, except such as sometimes crops out in boys in whom is pent up an exuberant store of fun, in advancing years he showed courage and independence in grappling with the realities of life, and was not easily daunted by failures in his plans. He commenced life as a farmer in Steuben County, N. Y. From thence he removed to Springville, Erie Co., N. Y., thence to Oneida, Knox Co., Ill. Twelve years later, he removed to the town of Oak, Nuckolls Co., Nebraska, where, with grown up sons, he established his home for the balance of life. He possessed the essential elements of a pioneer. He was energetic, persevering, self-sacrificing, hopeful. He was a man of sterling integrity, and a useful man in society, often caring more for others than himself. His death occurred at his sister’s, Mrs. Ferris, in Oneida, Knox Co., Ill., on the 2nd of July, 1880, of a pulmonary difficulty, which had long been undermining his once vigorous constitution. A portion of the last years of his life was spent as a colporteur and Sabbath school agent.

Mr. Child was reared a farmer; commenced active life as a teacher, in which capacity he was popular and successful. Soon after marrying he removed to the town of Oneida, Knox Co., Ill., and commenced farming. After a few years of success and accumulation, he removed to Creston, Iowa, where he now resides. Here his occupation is farming in connection with the harness making business. He is energetic and sagacious and usually compasses his plans and is known as a successful business man. Inheriting the best instincts of a worthy ancestry, his aims are elevated and his practical bearing is beneficent and christian.

Mr. Child was the Benjamin of the family. For several years he stayed on the homestead, caring for aged parents and a widow-sister with two young daughters. When the rebellion broke out he was drafted into the U. S. service. The alternative was before him, to obey the summons in person or procure a substitute. His duties under the paternal roof seemed imperative; hence he procured a substitute. His parents passing away, and his sister remarrying, he removed to Iowa and settled in Creston, his present home.

1454. i. Etta Child, b. May 22, 1870.

[Sixth Generation.]

Mr. Child was a farmer and the possessor of the old homestead of his father; and ranked among the intelligent and worthy citizens of the town; a man of sound and discriminating judgment, a nice sense of right and of strict probity. As a neighbor, he was kind and obliging, genial and happy in his domestic relations; his home was ever open for cheerful hospitality. An under current of humor was a characteristic which frequently cropped out, as well in his family as among his neighbors. Mrs. Child did not always escape his facetious bantering. Her good humour, however, was equal to her husband's, and her wit was always at her command, when needed to parry a joke. A standing panacea was "Erastus, the only evidence of superior judgment in the Child family I ever saw, was that exhibited in the choice of their wives." But the milk of human kindness flowed perpetually through their kindly natures, and domestic happiness was uninterrupted through a long life. Mrs. Child was of French descent. Her ancestors may have been of those Huguenot Refugees who found an asylum from persecution in the New World. She possesses that sparkling, piquant vivacity characteristic of that nation; thoroughly lovable and domestic in her character, genial, affable and courteous, she is a universal favorite in the neighborhood and circle of her acquaintance, and withal a sincere christian woman.

[Sixth Generation.]

1499. ii. Martha Child, second dau. and third child of Cephas and Martha (Child) Child, was b. in West Fairlee, Vt., in 1786, m. Capt. Moses Chamberlain, January, 1806. Resided in Bradford, Vt. Capt. Moses Chamberlain and his brother, Col. Moody Chamberlain, who married Mary Child, the fourth daughter of Cephas Child, were sons of Col. Remembrance Chamberlain, an early emigrant from Connecticut to Vermont; himself the son of Dea. Moses and Jemima Wright Chamberlain, of Connecticut. "There's many a true word spoken in jest," is a proverb finding such fulfillment in the life of Col. Remembrance Chamberlain, we believe others beside the family will be interested in its relation. Coming to Newbury, Vt., in 1770, he settled in the southern part of that town, and boarded with a Mr. Johnson, who used to ask him, in a joking way, why he did not marry. In like spirit, he would reply, "I am waiting for your widow." 1775, Mr. Johnson died. Threatened by an invasion of Tories and Indians from Canada, Mrs. Johnson took her three sons, the youngest an infant of months, upon a horse with her, and rode to Chester, New Hampshire, to the home of her parents. The next year she returned to Newbury, and became the wife of Col. Remembrance Chamberlain, and the mother of eight Chamberlain children. That blessings should attend this line, we can but believe, so thoroughly have they obeyed the command to "Honor father and mother." We find Col. R. Chamberlain brought to Vermont his parents and in his large household, they held honored and honorable positions, until called to their heavenly home. The same chivalric courtesies were extended to Mr. Cephas Child by his son-in-law, Capt. Moses Chamberlain. Capt. Chamberlain died in Bradford, Vt., in November, 1854, aged 77 years. Mrs. Martha Child Chamberlain, his wife, having died some fifteen years before, on the 25th of November, 1839.

1599. i. DARIUS CHILD, eldest child of Alpha and Mary May Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Dec. 26, 1779, m. Feb. 2, 1802, Letitia Morris. Mr. Child was a large, portly man, of 200 lbs. weight, and of fine personal appearance. The record of Mr. Child and descendants brings out some points of interest worthy of note. Soon after marrying he removed from Woodstock, Ct., to Fairlee, Orange County, Vt., where he spent his long and active life. The country was mostly covered with forests, and required many a sturdy blow to bring the soil into a productive state. There was no lack of muscular energy in Mr. Child to reach results that should afford adequate support for a growing family. He possessed a vigorous mind and powerful physical constitution. His enterprise, industry and probity secured him prominence among his fellow townsmen, by whom he was often promoted to official stations in the town and the commonwealth. He attained to easy pecuniary circumstances, and closed his days peacefully in his cherished home. Dec. 10, 1862, at the advanced age of 85 years.

1607. v. PAMELLA CHILD, b. in Fairlee, Vt., Nov. 21, 1811, m. Rev. Daniel Blodgett. Of him, his brother-in-law, Judge Child, says: "He prepared for college at the academy in his native town. Entered Dartmouth college from which he graduated in 1818. Was soon licensed to preach as a Congregational minister. Was ordained by the Royalton Association of Ministers in 1825. Settled as pastor in three or four different parishes; died in Randolph, Vt., 1855. One incident in college life is perhaps worthy of mention. At the time of the battle at Plattsburg, (1814) Mr. Blodgett, with four other members of his class, in obedience to his country's call, enlisted in the U. S. service for the common defence. Went to the scene of action and remained until honorably discharged, and returned to his Alma Mater." No issue from this marriage.

1608. vi. EDWIN SPENCER CHILD, b. Oct. 20, 1814, m. Aug. 1843, Juliette Richmonds. He d. July 5, 1844, leaving no children. Says Judge Child, "His widow is a lady of fine qualities, respectably connected, a genial, social companion with all her associates."

1609. vii. EPSRAIM MAY CHILD, b. in Fairlee, Vt., Nov. 8, 1874, d. April 17, 1830.

In stature, Judge Child is six feet, of spare proportions, bearing more the type of his mother’s family than the father’s, with strong marked features indicating strength and decision of character. He has been an influential citizen in town, county and state from early manhood. A man esteemed for his qualities of heart and mind: justly entrusted with official responsibilities, he has rendered much public service. Three years he represented his town in the State Legislature. Two years he held the Governor’s commission, as Associate Judge of the County Court of Orange; he has held a commission as Justice of the Peace for thirty-five or forty years.

While the Judge claims to be a plain farmer, it has neither dwarfed his intellect nor blunted his sensibilities, his liberal and enlightened opinions bear the stamp of wisdom and justice. In our frequent correspondence with him in the progress of this work, we have been impressed with a manliness and dignity of bearing which are the result of cultivation of heart and intellect. The following extract from one of his letters to us, reveals among other things, the effect of his early training under a pious grandmother. He remarks:

“You allude to my residence in Muddy Brook parish in Woodstock, Ct. Many recollections of my short stay in that strictly Puritan locality frequently return to my mind. It was there I was first inducted (under a good grandmother’s instructions) into the mysteries of the Westminster catechism, although in my then unripe years I understood no more about ‘the chief end of man’ than I did about the statutes of Patagonia; but it served as an exercise to my mind, and left an impression of scripture truths that will never be effaced while reason lasts.”

Mr. Child was a man of imposing appearance, being six feet in height and of solid proportions, his weight, when in health, being 200 lbs. or over; of a florid complexion, with dignified bearing, he looked the man of mark he was, having the unmistakable signs of intellectual strength and decision of character. He possessed a clear and logical mind, and was usually successful in maintaining his positions. He was a man of much culture and for a number of years, in early manhood, a successful educator, popular and influential among the intelligent and cultured classes, and held in high esteem by all his acquaintances. On relinquishing his profession as a teacher, he established himself in the mercantile business in Providence, R. I., where he spent the balance of his life, becoming quite opulent.

Mr. Child is a prominent clergyman of the Episcopal church, and resides in Newport, R. I. He is a graduate of Brown University, and has received the honorary degree S. T. D.

Rev. Dr. William Spencer Child has established in Newport, Rhode Island, a school for young men, called the "St. John's School," the standard of whose scholarship is so high that none can graduate therefrom without honorable and thorough attainments. In the report of the school year, ending 14th of July, 1880, we find the committee on compositions, stated in their written report, that they "commend with especial emphasis three features in the essays, namely, their marked originality: their extraordinary accuracy of spelling; and their ease and clearness of style, rising in some instances to genuine elegance." Elsewhere we read: "None receive a first testimonial unless the average of his scholarship for the year is 95 per cent. or upwards; or a second testimonial unless 90 per cent. or upwards." Several prizes were competed for, some offered by the Rector, Dr. Child, others by friends of the institution, Dr. Batterson, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Malcolm. We are pleased also, to record the promise for the future of the Child name, that a Miss Edith Child, and a son, Clarence G. Child, of the Rector, were awarded prizes for declamation and Latin. The school is finely located on the Point, near the bay in this most healthful, attractive watering place.

[Fourth Generation.]

1848. viii. Sarah Child, sixth child and third dau. of Capt. Benjamin and Patience Thayer Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Nov. 19, 1722, m. Feb. 19, 1746, Jedediah Morse, of Woodstock. This family became distinguished, and frequently allied to the Child family in subsequent years.

Deacon Jedediah Morse was a man of very strong individuality of character, he was born in Woodstock, Ct., in 1726. In 1763, we find he was chosen a deacon of the church, at or near the same time, another deacon was chosen, they had been married at very nearly the same date, and together they served the church for over fifty years; the wives of each deceased about the same time, after being married nearly sixty years—and the closely united friends after surviving their wives some fourteen years, were scarce separated in death. Dea. Jedediah Morse was chosen selectman in 1763, and in 1764, representative to the General Court of Connecticut, a position he held for thirty one years. In 1764, he was chosen town clerk, and held this office twenty-seven years. He was made Justice of the Peace in 1774, and continued in this office until 1801. He was a man very methodical in all his modes of thought and act, and a quaint resumé of his life, recapitulating his numerous official acts in the differing offices held by him, with sundry comments thereon, in the same measured, singular phraseology, is yet in the custody of a descendant. Mrs. Sarah Child Morse died on the 5th of April, 1805, aged 83, having been married fifty-eight years. Dea. Morse died in 1819, aged 93.

[Fourth Generation.]  Children:

1657. i. Dorothea Morse, b. Dec. 20, 1747, d. April, 1755.
1659. ii. Calvin Morse, b. June 30, 1852, m. Sophia Mason.
1666. iv. Amos Morse, b. 1755-6, d. young.
1661. v. Dorothea Morse, b. April 29, 1757, married twice—1st, Silas May; 2d, a Mr. Bliss.
1663. vii. Jedediah Morse, b. Aug. 23, 1761, m. March 11, 1789, to Miss Elizabeth Ann Breese, of Shrewsbury, N. J. He was a graduate of Yale College, New Haven, Ct, in 1783. Dr. Morse was a prominent clergyman of the Congregational denomination during a long settlement at Charlestown, Mass. He was, however, better and more widely known as the "Father of American Geography." His first work on this subject, and the first of the kind published in America, he prepared and printed while yet a tutor in Yale College, New Haven, Ct, in 1783.

[Fourth Generation.]  Children:

1663. vii. Rev. Jedediah Morse, D.D., fourth son and seventh child of Sarah Child and Dea. Jedediah Morse, b. in Woodstock, Ct, Aug. 23, 1761, m. March 14, 1789, to Miss Elizabeth Ann Breese, of Shrewsbury, N. J. He was a graduate of Yale College, New Haven, Ct, in 1783. Dr. Morse was a prominent clergyman of the Congregational denomination during a long settlement at Charlestown, Mass. He was, however, better and more widely known as the "Father of American Geography." His first work on this subject, and the first of the kind published in America, he prepared and printed while yet a tutor in Yale College, in 1784. This was succeeded by larger works on Geography, also several gazetteers. But not alone was Dr. Morse absorbed in these geographical and historical studies; he was also a noted polemic—in opposing the Unitarian belief. He was sole editor of the Panoplist, a magazine published in Massachusetts for several years. Dr. Morse's life was one of unusual activity for a clergyman of that period; we find he was at one time under appointment of the United States Government, sent to the Northwest to examine into the condition of the Indians, as a result of this tour he published a volume entitled "Indian Report." He also published a "History of New England." The University of Edinburgh, Scotland, in recognition of his scholarly attainments conferred upon him his Doctorate. At the age of sixty-five Dr. Morse closed his full and respected life in New Haven, Ct, June 9, 1826, leaving a family honorably sustaining the father's repute; two of his sons possessed marked literary and scientific ability, with unusual inventive genius.

[Sixth Generation.] Children:
1666. i. Samuel Finley Breese Morse, b. April 27, 1791, m. twice—1st, Oct. 6, 1818. Lucretia Walker; m. 2d, Aug. 10, 1848, Sarah Griswold.
1668. iii. Edwards Sidney Morse, b. Feb. 7, 1794, m. April 1, 1841, Catherine Livingston.
1669. iv. Richard Cary Morse, b. May 6, 1797, m. twice—1st, 1828, Louisa Davis; m. 2d, Aug. 1856, Harriett Messenger.

[Sixth Generation.]
1666. i. Prof. Samuel Finley Breese Morse, LL. D., eldest son and child of Rev. Dr. Jedediah and Elizabeth A. Breese Morse, and grandson of Sarah Child and Dea. Jedediah Morse, was born in Charlestown, Mass., on the 27th April, 1791, was twice married, his first marriage to Miss Lucretia Walker, daughter of Mr. Charles Walker, of Concord, N. H., on the 6th October, 1818. Mrs. L. W. Morse died on the 7th February, 1827. Prof. Morse was married on the 10th August, 1828, to Miss Sarah Griswold.

Dr. Morse's name is so prominently linked with the application of magnetism to telegraphy, as almost to obscure the other talents of this distinguished man. He was a graduate of Yale College, New Haven, Ct., in 1810. The year following he went to England, in the company of Washington Allston, the artist; and while there became the pupil of the celebrated Benjamin West, in painting, to which pursuit he devoted many years; was so successful while yet in Great Britain as to enter one of his pictures, "The Dying Hercules," at an exhibition of the Royal Academy. In 1813 he received the gold medal of the Adelphi Society of Arts, at the hands of the Duke of Norfolk. Prof. Morse returned to America in 1815 and spent most of his time for the succeeding ten or twelve years in portrait painting. In 1829 Prof. Morse again crossed the Atlantic, remaining abroad some years; upon his return voyage, in 1832, the "idea of a permanent recording telegraph was suggested to him by a fellow voyager, Dr. Jackson." From this time Prof. Morse was absorbed by this project until, in 1844, his
The services were of unusual interest. nothing commonplace or trite was uttered, the accompanying programme of services but epitomises, we can do no more. The marvellous invention was its own testimony on the occasion from in front the speaker's desk, the ticking so slight as not to interrupt the speeches, tolled off its weird, sibyllistic characters, flashing words of greeting to all the principal cities of the Union, and, most strange of all, was the sending to His Honor, the Mayor of London, and the immediate response, dated London, Wednesday morning, one o'clock the 17th April, received in the Hall on Tuesday evening, the 16th, before eleven P. 1668. iii. Sidney Edwards Morse, third son and child of Dr. Jedediah and Elizabeth A. Breese Morse, and grandson of Sarah Child and Dea. Jedediah Morse, was born in Charlestown, Mass., on the 7th February, 1794, married on the 1st April, 1841, Catherine Livingston, dau. of Rev. Dr. Gilbert R. Livingston, of Philadelphia, Pa. She was born on the 24th September, 1813. Mr Morse graduated at Yale College, New Haven, Ct., in 1811; was associated with his brother, Prof. S. F. B. Morse, in the development of several of his mechanical inventions. He was, however, known widely as a journalist, first in 1815 establishing a weekly religious paper in Boston, Mass., called the Boston Recorder; with this paper his connection was brief, and in 1823, he united with his younger brother, Rev. Richard Morse, in establishing the New York Observer, the earliest religious paper in the State. He inherited the literary tastes of his father, and was himself the compiler of works upon physical and political geography. “In June, 1839, he in connection with Henry A. Munson, produced by a new art termed, Cerography, map prints superior to those hitherto known." His death occurred in the City of New York, on the 23d December, 1871.

Rev. Mr. Morse graduated from Yale College, New Haven, Ct., in 1812. Studied for the ministry and received his licensure, but was not long occupied with the duties of that profession. In 1823, he became the partner of his brother, Sidney E. Morse, in publishing the widely circulated journal, the New York Observer, a pioneer enterprise in this State, now a fixed fact. The possession by this family of such distinctive and unusual talents, verify the theories of transmission.

Mr. Leonard Walker was a mechanic and his ingenuity was remarkably versatile. His father being a blacksmith, he could not well avoid that trade. He learned also the art of card making, which was then after a most primitive fashion; each tooth of the card being made singly, and by hand, and the holes in the leather for the insertion of the teeth were made in the same slow and laborious manner. After the leather and teeth were prepared, they were sent to all the families in the region who would receive them, that the women and children might push the teeth into their place in the leather. Mr. Leonard Walker was a pioneer in devising a method to accomplish this work by machinery. Mr. and Mrs. Walker, with their family, at that time consisting of four children, in the year 1797 removed from Woodstock, Conn., to Strafford, Vt. In this new settlement, where mechanics were few, his ingenuity had ample range, for not only everything that could by any possibility come under the name of blacksmithing was done by him, but clocks, fowling-pieces, spinning-wheels, pocket-knives, brass-kettles, trunk-locks, jews-harps, tin horns and teapots, when out of order, were brought to him; and he felt as much at home in soldering a gold finger-ring, or ear-ring, as he did in splicing a crow-bar. As a citizen he was active in every enterprise that was a benefit to a new country. took a deep interest in having the best schools: was foremost in the erection of the meeting-house, whose beautiful situation on the knoll at the north end of the green is unsurpassed. He made the vane for the steeple in that "universal manufactory," and his son Charles, (afterward the Rev. Charles Walker, D. D.,) then eight years old, sawed the laths for the plastering. His whole influence was in favor of law and order; he early embraced the cause of temperance, and gave up his much loved pipe. In all these good ways and works Mrs. Walker was a thorough help-meet. Guiding her children and her whole household in paths of pleasantness and peace. a true Mother in Israel." For about twenty years Mrs. Walker read Scott's Family Bible through each year, with all the notes and observations. Never had a numerous family a more excellent mother. Mr. George Walker, the eighth child of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Walker, remained at home until he was of age, and does not remember ever hearing an angry word pass his mother's lips. Mrs. Walker died on September 1st, 1843, her husband survived her seven years. passed from earth on the 9th September, 1851. [This sketch of Mr. and Mrs. L. Walker is furnished us by Mr. Geo. Walker, of Northford. Ct.]

[Sixth Generation.]

1715. i. Rev. Charles Walker, D. D., eldest son of Chloe Child and Leonard Walker, b. in Woodstock, Conn., 1st February, 1791, was a vigorous, active and wide awake youth, fond of sports and athletic games, but loving books better; often he would leave his playmates to sit happily beside his mother, reading such old standard works as Doddridge, Milton, Young and Baxter. But he had little leisure for play or reading, for the exigencies of a new settlement left small space for pastime. The saw-mill, shop and farm kept him (and his younger brothers) busy, and his labors were performed with a willing mind and deft hand. When he was of age he went to Woodstock, Conn., among the friends of his parents, and his own infant days; through the influence of these relatives he obtained a position in a woolen mill, and such was his dexterity, inherited from his father, with the training of the "universal manufactory" of the home in Vermont, that he was soon at the head of the establishment, where he continued a few years, giving entire satisfaction to his employers. Under the preaching of the Rev. Samuel Backus, he was led to embrace the truth in Jesus the Christ. and, like Paul, the first question was "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" He decided to devote himself to saving others, and he never lost sight of that aim, keeping to it most singly through a long and very useful life.

Mr. Walker devoted himself to study for the ministry of the Congregationalist order. His first settlement was at Rutland, Vermont, and hither he brought his bride, Miss Lucretia Ambrose, of Concord, New Hampshire, to whom he was married on the twenty-second of September, 1823. Mr. Walker remained with the church in Rutland for ten years. After a period of unusual labor, his voice failed utterly and he was compelled to resign his parish. Mr. Walker took charge of the high school in Castleton, Vermont, and in about two years recovered his voice and was settled over a Congregational church in Brattleboro, Vermont, in January, 1835, where for eleven years he was a beloved and successful pastor. A very decided stand taken on the temperance question gave offence to some of the parish, and lest injury should befall the church Mr. Walker withdrew, preferring the good of others to his own ease—though firm in his views of the right in his position. In August, 1846, Dr. Walker was installed as pastor of a church in Pittsford, Vermont, where he continued till, from advanced age, he felt impelled to resign—a ministry of more than eighteen years had greatly endeared him to this people. In the words of one who knew him well, "Dr. Walker was endowed by nature with a mind of vigorous and substantial power. He was clear, consecutive and strong. Few men saw better than he did the main points on which the truth of an argument depended. Few men could put those points into statements more simple, logical and convincing. His intellect was healthful. There was nothing morbid, still less sentimental, in his constitution. The robustness of his physical health, as well as the practical character of his early training contributed, doubtless, to this sound quality of his mental action. This characteristic gave his judgment great weight. He was a man strong for counsel. In the decision of vexed questions of controversy, in ecclesiastical or social matters, his verdict was pretty certain to be right. Hence few men were oftener called into requisition when difficulties arose in churches. His service upon councils was no small or unimportant part of his work. Without being a strenuous or intense thinker, his mind was active and retained its alertness to the last. He lived in his age. He looked with always interested eye upon the progress of affairs in state and society. He read history for its lessons of practical and present instruction. He had definite opinions in politics. He applied the principles of the gospel to public affairs. Hence his occasional discourses, drawn out by events in the social and political world, were always instructive and interesting. As a sermonizer he was marked by some signal merits. His style of composition was singularly clear and chaste. He wrote good English. No one ever mistook his meaning. This directness and effectiveness of address was aided by a pulpit manner in a high degree impressive. Dr. Walker was a large, dignified and handsome man, a man whose presence commanded respect and attention. His voice was penetrating and powerful. It was also expressive of tender and strong emotions, so that in his more earnest passages he held his hearers in an intense and solemn grasp. In his social character Dr. Walker was genial and affectionate. Not a great talker, he was fond of good conversation. He was loved by all the children. The success of others pleased him. He did not think that wisdom was dead, or the world growing worse all the time. But perhaps the most characteristic trait of Dr. Walker was his simplicity. He was a man utterly incapable of finesse or duplicity. Few men ever carried such demonstration of sincerity in all they did. Of exceedingly few could it be said with equal truth, he was a "man in whom there was no guile." Dr. and Mrs. Walker had six children. His death occurred on the 28th of November, 1870, at Pittsford, Vermont.

1730. iii. Rev. George Leon Walker, D. D., son of Rev. Dr. Charles and Lucretia Ambrose Walker, born in Rutland, Vermont, married Sept. 16, 1858, Miss Maria Williston. Dr. Walker is a clergyman of the Congregationalist order. Settled in Hartford, Ct. He has never known vigorous health, yet has been able to sustain himself well as a sermonizer; is an interesting, not to say fascinating preacher. The lawyer and the child being equally attracted. Dr. Walker's health has been so frail as to compel the resignation of several settlements, but as strength permits, he still labors for the Master. Dr. and Mrs. Walker have had two children.

[ Eighth Generation.] Children:

m. Miss Minerva Hoadley, daughter of Jairus Hoadley, Esq., of Northford, Ct., 2d January, 1832.

Mr. Walker was a mechanic and manufacturer. He spent his youth upon the home farm, in the saw-mill, and more pleasurably in the "universal manufactory" of his father, and inherited largely the peculiar gifts of his father of brain and hand. Upon attaining his majority he left home, and was fully and successfully employed for some eight years in various machine shops. Upon his marriage he settled in New Haven, Conn., where he established a lucrative business in stoves, etc. Mr. George Walker was the first to introduce patent warm air furnaces into churches and dwellings in that city. After residing in New Haven about fourteen years, Mr. Walker in the year 1844, removed with his family to the City of New York, and for fifteen years his was the leading house in the city for warming dwellings and public buildings. He sold out and occupied the next ten years in many kindly acts of service for others, making this his business as it was truly his pleasure: this included the investigation of the mining and metal resources of the country, involving three journeys to the Rocky Mountains of Colorado, made by mule teams. Not being a writer, Mr. Walker has never published an account of these trips,—though the home-fireside and social board are often enlivened by reminiscences of the varied and amusing experiences of those long journeys. Not unremunerative were they either to Mr. Walker or his associates. The evening of life is spent by Mr. and Mrs. Walker in the home of Mrs. Walker's infancy, where, as in all the years of their united life, happiness gilds their unselfish lives, and competence gives ease.

Mr. Phineas Walker was the home-son, and was such a son to his parents in their years of infirmity through age, as we are warranted to expect a son to be, whose training is that of scriptural command. It is only a truthful, though high praise to say of him, "He is a good specimen of honest New England character; is a deacon in the church, and a substantial supporter of those things that are of good report." Mr. Walker combines the farm pursuits with mechanical as did his father. This fertility of brain power seems a frequent possession of the genuine New Engander. Three children were given them of whom only one remains.

Two noble sons of rare intellectual powers in early manhood rested from their labors, and went home almost on the threshold of their young manhood. Mr. L. Walker d. June 30, 1878.

[Seventh Generation.]

1745. i. Aldace Atwood Walker, eldest son of Lucius and Henrietta Davenport Walker, b. January 30, 1839. Was a genuine scholar, educated at the Free academy in New York City. He was a young man of great promise, and though so young when called home, had already become a successful teacher. He died of consumption, on the 23d of Oct. 1861.

[Seventh Generation.]

Lucius was in some respects a remarkable child. When only four years old he would repeat on his sister's melodeon any tune she would play; simple airs of course, as she was young; at first not keeping time, but would touch every note, and soon would get the time. At eight years of age he did not incline to music at all, but was wholly absorbed in his studies. He would give the diameter of each planet, with its distance from the sun, the length of its day and year, with the relative size of each, and number of their moons, as fast as he could speak. And on the blackboard he would make a diagram of the whole, and in doing it he would make the chalk fly rapidly. At fifteen years of age he was a sly rogue, manifested in sundry ways beside running away and enlisting in the 2d Connecticut Heavy Artillery, under the assumed name of Charley Morris, so that his parents could not find him. But when once with the army, he wrote to his parents, and ever after was as regular in his correspondence with the home friends as the exigencies of war would permit. He was, what he looked, a mere boy, but he carried his musket, haversack and other accoutrements like a veteran, and never flinched, though marching twenty-four and even thirty-six hours consecutively. He was with Gen. Sheridan in all the battles of the Shenandoah Valley. In his own words we give an incident of his Shenandoah experience:

"At that time I was stationed at Corps Headquarters in the capacity of 'Provost Guard,' and in company with others of the guard used frequently to go into the country on foraging expeditions. On such occasions we generally went ten or twelve miles from the camp, and were of course liable to the attacks of guerrillas with whom the country swarmed. At this time we started with the teams about daylight, and after travelling about four hours, halted at a barn, which stood near the road; the main part of our squad (about twenty in all) commenced loading the wagons with hay, sending out six of us 'sheep-hunting,' which always formed an important part of our expeditions; having the reputation of a good shot, I was chosen one of the six. We did not find any until we had gone fully a mile from the wagons, when we saw a large flock in an inclosed lot. When sufficiently near, we opened fire.' The echoing reports of our pieces had scarcely died away when we suddenly saw three puffs of white smoke arise from a belt of wood directly before us, about two hundred yards distant, and three bullets with their peculiar zip, zip, zip, flew past our heads. As our muskets were discharged we could not return the fire, but started for the wagons at full speed, followed by a scattering volley of musketry from at least twenty mounted guerrillas, whom we could now see emerging from the wood on the gallop toward us. As we were on foot we knew it would be useless to try to outrun them, and consequently determined to fight it out. For this purpose we selected an old building composed of huge pine logs, which Providentially stood near. On arriving here we loaded our pieces, and as the guerillas came within fifty yards we fired into the n., which knocked one man over and brought the rest to a halt. For a few moments all was quiet. Then one of them approached waving a handkerchief and calling on us to surrender if we did not want our d-d throats cut; we told him we could not see the point, when he departed cursing like a pirate, in which he was assisted by his comrades, who all tried to see who could vituperate the —— Yankees the worst, treating us with an occasional bullet, but not dare g to advance. We kept up a random fight for a short time, but fearing our ammunition would become exhausted, resolved to cease firing until they made some new hostile demonstration. In a few moments we saw they were trying to flank us, about half of them going on our right, and the rest on our left. Presently we saw they were preparing for a charge; accordingly, three of us took one side and three the other, fixed our bayonets and resolved to sell our lives dearly. Soon they advanced, receiving our fire which killed two of them, when within twenty yards we rose and prepared to give them cold steel, when suddenly an overwhelming volley was poured into them by a party of our cavalry, which were out on a scout. At this new turn of affairs the surviving ruffians instantly made tracks, but were pursued and taken prisoners before they could reach their horses. Among the nine prisoners was the notorious Dick Saunders. Thirteen other guerrillas lay on the ground killed and wounded. After this we left for our wagons, not however forgetting our sheep."

In his sketch of his army life, he thus describes the battle of Cedar Creek:

"Just before morning we heard several volleys of musketry, but at first paid little attention to it, as we thought it picket-firing. We were soon informed of our mistake for orders came to pack up and fall in. We formed in line and marched toward the firing, halting in the road just in front of a ravine. The morning was foggy, and we could not see far, but presently discovered two lines of battle in front of us, which we took to be our own men. But on receiving a volley from them learned our mistake. We replied to their fire for about fifteen minutes, and then being ordered to fall back, a panic seemed to seize everybody, and for about two miles we made quick time, until we were stopped by a line of our cavalry, when we (the 6th corps) halted and soon after gave the Rebels two tremendous volleys which had the effect of making them stop quite suddenly. We then were put on the skirmish line for about three hours, when the arrival of Sheridan fixed things up by forming for a charge which was soon done, and in all my army life, I never saw a more desperate charge. The Johnnies stood as long as they could and then left, and when night came we found ourselves in our old camp, and thus ended the battle of Cedar Creek."

After Lee's surrender he had an honorable discharge. He had not grown much in his three years' service, and his musket shoulder was drawn down so much we feared it might prove a permanent deformity. But he soon began to grow, his shoulder obtained its right position, and he became a good-sized, well formed man. The family moving from New Haven, Conn., to Louisville, Kentucky, and his four year old passion for music reviving, he was soon at the head of the musical profession in Louisville; and was by a unanimous vote elected leader of the Organist Club. He composed several airs. He never used tobacco, never took intoxicating drinks, though both were so common in the army. He became a communicant of the church, and was in every respect an exemplary young man. His death was sudden and unaccountable. He was bathing with others in the Ohio river, sank and did not rise. His death was upon the 14th July, 1872, when in his twenty-fifth year.1

[Sixth Generation.]

1727, xiii. Rev. Aldace Walker, D. D., thirteenth child and eighth son of Chloe Child and Leonard Walker, was born in Strafford, Vermont, 10th July, 1812. He was an exceedingly pleasant boy and a studious youth. At the age of eighteen he was converted, and immediately commenced preparation for the ministry. He graduated from Dartmouth College, Hanover, New Hampshire, in 1837; and from the Theological Seminary in Andover, Mass., in 1840. In the same year he was called to settle over the Congregational church in West Rutland, Vermont, where he remained until 1862, when failing health compelled him to give up the pastorate, to the lasting regret of his people. After two years his health was so far restored as to permit him to accept a call to Wallingford, Vermont, where he remained until his death.

1We are indebted to his Uncle Mr. George Walker for this sketch.
Early in his ministry he was elected a member of the corporation of Middlebury College, to whose interests he was ever after devoted. He was for many years a corporate member of the "American Board of Foreign Missions." In the language of one who knew him well, "The character of Dr. Aldace Walker was a harmonious one, centered upon an abiding purpose, and distinguished by sound judgment, such as usually comes from absence of selfishness, and devotion to a great cause. Such a character drew to itself duties as well as dignities. In the general convention and in the councils of the church, as well as in the affairs of his own parish, his wise advice was sought and followed. He was a leader by the divine right of superior wisdom, tact and fidelity. It was impossible to come within the reach of his character without being impressed with its sincerity; its entire freedom from disturbing ambition, and the depressing influence of a conflict between the outward surroundings of life and its inward purpose. In his ministry of twenty-one years in West Rutland, he became identified with his parish in an unwonted degree. His words were received with respect by his people who always trusted him. Revivals marked his ministry, which had no drawback to its success. It stands a monument of his life. He was happy in his work, which never fretted him. He had a faculty of saying and doing things easily. His power was in the pulpit, where he showed his capacity to lead men. He never misled his hearers or left them in doubt, that it was best for them to accept the truth. As trustee of Middlebury College he was always self-possessed, and never doubted that a way would open out of all difficulties. No one had a calmer head, or firmer decision." Dr. Aldace Walker was married to Miss Mary A. Baker, April 30th, 1841, in the same year of his graduation from the Theological Seminary and settlement at West Rutland, Vermont. Dr. Walker's death occurred at Wallingford, Vermont, the place of his last parochial charge, 24th July, 1878.

[Fourth Generation.]

1784. iv. Stephen Child, fourth child and third son of Edward and Margaret Weld Child, b. in Roxbury, Mass., Aug. 17, 1719. Was a soldier in the successful expedition under General Pepperell, (afterwards Sir William Pepperell, made Baronet for his prowess, the first of the American Colonists to receive a title;) mostly from Boston and vicinity—to Port Royal, in 1745, at a period when England was disputing claims with the French. Port Royal then in possession of the French, was captured and became a British Province, under the name of Nova Scotia. When Louisburg, which had been called the Gibraltar of America, was taken, and the army had entered the city, the soldiers were filled with amazement at the ease with which they had possessed it. The fortifications had cost five millions of dollars, and had been regarded as impregnable. Yet an undisciplined army of four thousand farmers and fishermen had gained an easy possession. They seemed inspired with the words of Whitefield, then in Boston, to the little army as it was about to set sail: "Nothing is to be despaired of when Christ is the leader."

Having no date by which to determine with certainty the fact and time of Stephens Child's marriage, our knowledge of his descendants is inferential rather than positive. But there is strong circumstantial evidence that Aaron Child, born in Roxbury, Mass., in 1741, was the son of this Stephen Child, of the Port Royal expedition. We think that perfect assurance may sometime be obtained.* Lemuel Child who kept the famous Peacock tavern in Roxbury, Mass., is known to have been a brother to this Aaron Child.

An amusing incident is related as occurring at this popular place of resort. "When the British officers were in Boston, Mass., they frequently made up skating parties for suppers, and after exercising at the pond, would ride over and partake of the good cheer of the Peacock. Upon one of these occasions, so says tradition, the "pretty maid" of the inn, afterwards Mrs. Williams, a niece of the inn-keeper, was followed by one of the gay young bloods into the cellar, whither she had gone for supplies for the table. Being familiar with the premises, she blew out the lighted candle she held in her hand and made her escape, not forgetting to fasten the cellar door behind her. After thumping his head against the rafters in the vain effort to follow her, her persecutor was finally obliged to alarm the house before

* If any of Lemuel Child's descendants should see this volume and have in their possession any data relative to the ancestry of Aaron Child, born 1741, they will confer a favor by communicating with Stephen Child of New Hartford, Oneida county, New York, he could be released from his awkward position." Washington and other distinguished officers were frequent visitors here during the siege. Lemuel Child led the minute men of the third parish in the Lexington battle.—(Roxbury paper.)

later Woodstock—a colony of Massachusetts, till the change of boundary line gave the town to the State of Connecticut, here Lieut. Child resided many years. When his son, Ebenezer, wished to remove to Vermont, he was found ready to encounter anew the discomforts and rigors of pioneer life. Lieut. Child was a man of energetic, resolute firmness, but with a most true affection. His death occurred in 1773, at Union, Orange Co., Vt. Mrs. Elizabeth Bacon Child d. Nov. 30, 1768.

[Fourth Generation.]

2073. iv. Ebenezer Child, Jr., second son and fourth child of Ebenezer and Elizabeth Bacon Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., (then called New Roxbury, Mass.) April 17, 1732. Mr. Child was twice married—first in 1754 to Miss Charity Bugbee, who was b. in Woodstock in 1728, was the mother of his children, and a woman of most lovely character. A son writes of her, "she died as she had lived, a meek and humble christian, Dec. 20, 1772; she was courteous to servants, and one in whom the poor found a friend, and the needy was rarely sent empty away." The same son writes of the second mother, Alice Cobb, who m. Mr. Ebenezer Child, Jr., in 1775, as a most kind parent and lovely woman.

1 This Susan Child who married Peter was erroneously stated to have been daughter of Nathaniel Child.
Mr. Ebenezer Child, Jr., was a man of indomitable will and when, by any stress of circumstances, diverted from the pursuit of his regular business, he immediately turned to the best work offering. So we find him on the first winter after his removal to Leicester, Vt., when the rigors of the northern winters prevented further toil upon his farm, teaching in Rutland, Vt. The farm he had chosen was wholly unredeemed, and the cutting of large forest trees, with the sturdy strokes of the axe, was an initiative step to open the soil to the sun before any crops could be looked for. The trees felled, a primitive plowing around the thick-standing stumps made ready the ground for corn and wheat. Patriotic also, he was engaged in the warfare, which darkened the early years of the colonies. He served in the French war under Generals Putnam and Durkee. The severities of exposure and labor proved too violent, and Mr. Child succumbed to an inflammatory fever and died in the town of Leicester, Addison Co., Vt., June 7, 1791; he had been received into the communion of the church in 1740. Upon the organization of the town, he had been chosen its first town clerk. Mrs. Alice Cobb Child d. Mch. 22, 1801. [Fifth Generation.] Children:

Mr. Child in early manhood had a vigorous constitution, and a fondness for adventure not altogether free from hardships and exposure to danger. His love for hunting wild game led him to the Adirondac Mountains, where his winters for some years were spent hunting the deer and other wild animals abounding in those forests, making his mode of life an opportunity for gain in the valuable furs and hides which he was able to bring to a paying market. Few were regarded as a better "shot" than Mr. Child. The vigor of former years has given place to infirmities which enfeeble his declining years.

Mr. Child had an inheritance of strong intellectual and moral qualities, and so far conquered all unpropitious surroundings as to make them contribute to the development of a strong mind, in a strong physical system. Early in life he was a puny boy, and always regarded much younger than he really was. When past ninety years of age, he writes most touchingly and tenderly of being lifted by his father to look upon the pale, silent face of the loving mother whose care he would never know, and of whom this act would prove the sole remembrance; he was then about three years old. The death of his mother, when he was so young, led to his being placed in the home of an elder married sister, with whom he remained until the second marriage of his father, and the family removed from Connecticut to Vermont, when he bravely shared the perils and deprivations, toil and loneliness of a home in the sparsely settled Green Mountain State. After aiding his father to build their log-house and gather in the grain raised around the stumps of trees on their lately cleared land in the summer and autumn of their entrance into Vermont, in the late autumn he made his way on foot and alone, to the old home and friends in Connecticut. He was then about twelve years old. With the dear kindred he spent the winter. Early spring found him on a rudely constructed vehicle, with the new mother, and their small household supplies, making his way amid cold and snow to Vermont.

His father's death occurring a few years later, Mr. Ebenezer Child settled the estate and started a new farm for himself, to which he brought his young bride, with strong courage and manly pride to carve out his own fortunes, and rear a large family. For many years, till quite past the threescore years and ten, his activities were laborious, continuous and efficient. The wonderful retention of the mental faculties until his death, when ninety-six years of age, help to prove that it is undue and extreme use which destroys. Mr. Ebenezer Child very early in life took such a decided and intelligent stand in the township upon all questions, political, religious and social, as to render him a power for good, and a frequent recognition by his fellow townsmen in the bestowal of differing offices, attested their appreciation. At the age of seventy-one, we find him to have delivered an address at Pittsfield, Vermont, on the formation of a Lyceum in that town. For many years Mr. Child was a regular contributor to certain local newspapers of articles upon most of the leading topics of the day, and as at this period, the differences of the Arminian and Calvinistic Creeds were deeply moving the New England mind, Mr. Child was especially interested and active in the discussions. The Masonic order found in him a friend and defender, and the growth and development of the young republic of the United States, awakened his deepest, heartiest enthusiasm. After passing into the four-score years some infirmities of body rendered locomotion more difficult and the amusements and occupations were limited to the use of the pen and reading. Sizeable folios were filled with copied letters and manuscripts of his composition, as legacies for his fondly cherished grandchildren, towards whom he entertained the most lavish affection, in whose progress he took pride, and whose ambition he sought to kindle for noblest effort and attainment. One or two extracts from letters addressed to the grandsons, Don Alonzo and Chas. G. Child, of New York, will evince his own clear mind, and true interest in them. From a letter bearing date Sept. 25, 1865, we give a sketch of his daily life, which he says he furnishes them as they may not be able to understand how a man so aged could pass the day, (then being ninety five):

As a great poet has said—

‘Tis but one youth at most that mortals have,
And one old age prepares us for the grave.’

I retire at 7 o'clock p. m., and Morpheus soon locks up the sensitive organs in quiet and balmy slumber, which I generally enjoy until something like 4 o'clock a. m. I then return thanks to the great Author of my many blessings, and indulge half an hour in repeating and singing to myself those old hymns and psalms I used to indulge in sixty or seventy years ago. I arise about 6 a. m., after dressing myself, by the aid of my staff with some bodily exertion walk the piazza, then return to my room, wash, take half or three-fourths of a wine-glass of bitters; by this time I hear the glad voice sounding, ‘Breakfast ready, Father!’ of which I partake heartily. The amusements of the day you know well, when you think of reading papers, writing, and scrap-book, etc. My vacant hours of late dwell much on moral and scientific subjects. As I see the first rays of morning light breaking forth from the East, I say, here is another incontestible evidence of the being of a Supreme Creator. Nothing less than Almighty power, which creates and governs a universe of eighty millions of worlds, could keep in order this inconceivably great and mysterious machine, whereby sun and moon, stars, comets and their satellites, move in such harmony for thousands of years without the least variation.
Again he writes—

The mind of man evidently designed for progressive improvement, not to end with life, but to continue in another state of improved existence forever, if we continue to improve our intellectual faculties while living here on earth. Youth seems to be the favorable time for the cultivation and maturing of our moral and social natures, and ennobling faculties that will enable us to become worthy and respected members of society. Says a great and good man: 'The youth who cultivates his intellect and habitually obeys the precepts of Christianity, will in mature life enjoy within himself a fountain of moral and intellectual happiness, the appropriate reward of obedience.' Man when viewed in one aspect resembles a demon, in another he bears the impress of the image of God. When seen in his crimes he might resemble a devil, when contemplated in his charities, his discoveries in science, his vast combinations for the benefit of his race, he appears a bright intelligence from heaven. I have illustrated these facts for your especial consideration that you may now in youth profit by the comparison; make choice and habitually pursue a course of life tending to refinement in mind and manners.

In another letter he writes—

November has been very mild and accommodating, though his hoarse and hollow breath betokens his sudden dissolution, then stern and gloomy December will usurp his iron rule and unrelenting winter follow in his train. These rough November blasts have already attacked this old, dilapidated and decaying tenement, that has endured the chill frosts of more than four score and ten winters and can make but feeble defence, and we are now fortifying a place for retreat during cold winter's unwelcome rigor, which will require a covering like the shield of Ajax, 'With seven thick folds o'er cast of tough bull's hide, and solid brass the last.'

'But let chill winter bind the crystal streams, Withdraw from earth the sun's enlivening beams
And scatter snow-flakes o'er the frozen sea,
Thou canst not freeze the streams of true-eyed charity.'

We close these extracts which might be much multiplied with his pleasant wishes for these grandsons, written them on the incoming of a New Year—

May your happiness increase with your virtues, may generous hearts, true friendships, peaceful and happy firesides, be the reward of your labors of love, is the sincere desire of your old grandfather.

2224. vii. Alonzo Child, fourth son and seventh child of Ebenezer and Anna Gray Child, b. in Brandon, Vt., July 21, 1807, m. Aug. 28, 1838, in Pittsfield, Vt., Miss Mary Goodrich, dau. of Mr. James Goodrich; a Scotch family. Mrs. Goodrich, the mother of Mrs. Alonzo Child, was a Wallace, said to be in direct descent from the hero of Scotland.

Mr. Alonzo Child, like his brothers and sisters, was educated in the common schools and academies of New England, but from the rapid growth of the frame which early attained more than average stature, there resulted much physical weakness, resulting in an affection of the eyes which ultimately destroyed the sight of one. Skillful treatment from the leading physicians of Massachusetts saved him from utter blindness. Though thus tried at his entrance upon the activities of life, he was nothing daunted, but with cheerful zeal began the career which resulted for him in such pecuniary success. His debut was made in Lowell, Mass., a large manufacturing city. Hither he bent his steps, entrusted by Dr. Eliphalet Nott, President of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., with a consignment of the stoves invented and patented by Dr. Nott, for the use of anthracite coal. The venture was an entirely successful one, attesting anew the quick apprehension of character, and whole-hearted generosity of the learned Doctor, as well as the thorough business capabilities of the young merchant. This location though pleasant to Mr. Child in many respects, did not offer the opportunity for that enlargement of business of which Mr. Alonzo Child felt capable. Closing his affairs in Lowell, Mr. Child went to the West and found in the stirring haste, and breadth of method, the kind of business atmosphere for which he was especially adapted. He made St. Louis, Missouri, the base of his operations, which proved an eminently wise decision. Mr. Child made for himself a name and position among the merchant princes of that city. His interests were wide and deep; unostentatious in charities, he was yet always ready to help on every movement which promised elevation to his fellow-beings, either pecuniarily or morally. Many prosperous business houses to-day owe largely their success to some kindly loan or start in life from his easily sliding purse-string. With all this extreme activity, Mr. Child was a man of strong home attachments.
delighting to render his abode one of attraction from its luxury of comforts. In the years 1843-4, Mr. Child was in Europe combining business profits and intellectual culture. From the year 1850, Mr. Child became a resident of Tarry-town on-the-Hudson, not far from New York City, though continuing his business houses in the West and usually passing a large part of each winter in St. Louis. Of his patriotism we will permit the accompanying resolutions to speak, premising that Mr. Child had reached the close of his life, so full of large interests in the West, and of pleasant, useful, honorable characteristics in the social world of his eastern home, on the third of June, 1873. Mr. Child was trustee of the Mutual Life Ins. Co., of New York City, and director of the Westchester Savings Bank, aiding largely in the formation of the latter.

At a regular meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Mutual Life Ins. Co., of New York City, held June 4, 1873, the President announced the death of Alonzo Child, a Trustee of the company for many years. Judge Davis addressed the Chair as follows, presenting the appended resolutions:

"Mr. President: The announcement you have just made of the decease of one of the most respected and esteemed members of this Board, must fill every heart with profound sorrow and deep sympathy. Alonzo Child has been a useful and honored member of this Board for many years, always faithful to duty, wise in council and ready to discharge every obligation with fidelity and integrity. Mr. Child was distinguished for a long and honored mercantile career. His commercial integrity was never questioned, and he ever stood in the front ranks of those who have transacted the business affairs of our country. But I desired to refer particularly to the invaluable and patriotic services he rendered to the country in its late struggles for national existence. Mr. Child had a large mercantile house established at St. Louis, and through it, for more than thirty years previous to 1861, had furnished the government with all needful supplies in the line of his business, for its armies in the West, and the Indian tribes dependent upon the government for their annual needs. At the commencement of the war, his firm at St. Louis invested everything they had for the purpose of maintaining the government of the United States. They had at one time risked over a million of dollars in supplies furnished to maintain troops in the field. They were the first to hang out the stars and stripes on Main St., in St. Louis; and were always willing to trust the government with anything they wanted and to imperil their whole fortune in its support. The merchants in St. Louis would not sell to or trust the government, but Mr. Child's house did, until his resident partner thought they were ready to break, and telegraphed to Mr. Child, at New York, to know if they should go on, to which Mr. Child replied: 'Proceed to the extent of every dollar we have, and all you can raise.' His efforts to sustain the government were characterized by its officers as nearly superhuman, and the name of no man should be held in more grateful remembrance than that of Alonzo Child, for his unrequited and priceless services in sustaining this nation in its hour of peril. I quote from the record for these facts in a case in which I acted professionally for Mr. Child: and I shall ever blush for my country at the injustice it meted out to him in the matter.

But peace to his memory. He has gone where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. Let us ever cherish in grateful remembrance his many virtues, his kind, genial and quiet manners, and imitate his self-sacrifices, patriotic devotion to his country, and fidelity in the discharge of every duty."

Much more of like character was here said, and by the Trustees of the Westchester Savings Bank, as well as by the press, one sentiment pervading every utterance that of thorough, ready, cordial recognition of the entire honesty of his life.

He was engaged in the battles of Bunker Hill and Bennington, as well as other battles.

Col. Jonathan Child was among the early emigrants from Woodstock, Ct., to that part of New Hampshire bordering on Vermont, and settled in Orford, N. H. At what date we are not informed, but probably between the years of 1770 and 75. Hon. William Child, of Fairlee, Vt., who is familiar with the history of that part of the State of Vermont upon which Orford borders, and who has supplied a chapter of history for a “Historical Gazetteer” of Vermont, says:

“In my researches for scraps of history for that work, I found Col. Jonathan Child, then of Orford, N. H., was with others quite prominent in the first organization of Fairlee, Vt., as a town, which was then a small parcel of the territory known as the ‘New Hampshire Grant,’ and as a matter of course, several of our first town meetings between the years 1770 and 1780, were warned and held in Orford, N. H. Col. Child, I think, afterwards moved to Lyme, N. H., and possibly might have crossed the river and located in Thetford, Vt. At any rate his son William, who spent a large property as commissary for the purchase of supplies for our Revolutionary soldiers, located on a river farm in Thetford, Vt., where some of his descendants are still residing.”

2380. iv. Major Jonathan Child, fourth child and second son of William and Mary Heaton Child, b. in Lyme, N. H., Jan. 30, 1785, m. May 7, 1818, Sophia Eliza Rochester, second dau. of Hon. Nathaniel Rochester, the founder of the city of Rochester, N. Y. He died in Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1860, and was buried at Mt. Hope Cemetery in Rochester, N. Y. They had five sons and four daughters.

Mr. Jonathan Child descended from worthy ancestors whose nobility of birth was derived not of royal blood, but of inherited virtues, that imparted dignity, stability and commanding influence to their possessor. His history evinces traits of character that fitted him to occupy prominent and influential positions in society, both from his moral virtues and his intellectual force. The esteem in which he was held by his fellow citizens shows him to have been a sagacious, discreet and conscientious man. His record is one that his descendants may look back upon with pride, and with desire to emulate.

As a patriot, he inherited the spirit and courage of ancestors whose love of country was conspicuous in the Revolutionary War, in which father and son fought side by side. When the call went forth for volunteers in the war of 1812, Mr. Jonathan Child, (the subject of this notice) was enrolled as a volunteer, and fought in the battle of Fort Erie, and acquired the title of Major. At home he was as popular as he was influential abroad. The popular favor conferred upon him the honor of the first Mayor of the City of Rochester; and elected him one or more terms a member of the Legislature of the State of New York, from Ontario county. Few men have a deeper hold on the confidence and esteem of their fellow-citizens than did Mr. Child. We have been furnished with the following editorial articles, published in one of the Rochester papers, (the name of the paper was not given) on the occasion of his death, showing the estimate in which he was held in the community where he had spent the larger part of his active life:

DEATH OF EX-MAYOR CHILD.

"It will be heard with pain, but not with surprise, that our late fellow-citizen, the venerable Jonathan Child, is no more. He died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Asher P. Nichols, in Buffalo, at half-past one o'clock this morning. Mr. Child had been in feeble health for a year past, and for a few weeks he had been hopelessly prostrate. His disease was an affection of the heart. He had been at Buffalo some time, under the care of his daughter, whose attentions he required to smooth his pathway to the grave, and make his last moments comfortable. Mr. Child was born at Lyme, New Hampshire, on the 30th Jan'y, 1785. His grandfather, bearing the same name, was a soldier of the Revolution, as was his father. His father was a soldier in the war of 1812 and Mr. Child was also in that service, having held the post of major and paymaster in the militia of the State of New York. He was, we believe, present at the battle of Lake Erie.
Deceased came from New England to Utica in 1806, and there taught school, and was subsequently a clerk for Watts Sherman, an extensive merchant of that city. In 1810 Mr. Child came to what is now Monroe county, and located as a merchant at Charlotte. He subsequently removed to Bloomfield, Ontario county, and was there in the mercantile business till about 1820. He then came to Rochester, and was subsequently an extensive contractor on the canal. He had a large contract at Lockport for cutting through the mountain ridge for the canal, and he also kept a store in the village.

"In 1827, under the new village charter of Rochester, Mr. Child was chosen a trustee to represent the third ward, and he was re-elected in 1830.
In 1834, when the city charter was obtained, the common council elected Mr. Child mayor. He served, however, but a short time and resigned on the 23d day of June. He was a conscientious advocate of temperance and not agreeing with the policy of the board in granting licenses, he resigned that he might not sacrifice his principles or clog the wheels of government of the new city. In his letter of resignation to the board he said: 'It becomes incumbent on me, in my official character, to sign these papers (licenses) I am constrained to act according to my most solemn convictions of moral duty and estimation of legal right in all cases connected with the office intrusted to me. When I find myself so situated in my official station as to be obliged, either on the one hand, to violate these high obligations, or, on the other, to stand in opposition to the declared wishes of a large majority of the board, and through them of their constituents—my valued friends and fellow-citizens—I dare not retain the public station which exposes me to this unhappy dilemma. I, therefore, now most respectfully resign into your hands the office of mayor of the city of Rochester.' This was nobly done, and we do not care to point to a better index of the character of Hon. Jonathan Child than this extract from his letter to the board presents.

"In the later years of the life of Mr. Child he was unfortunate in business, and was deprived of all the gains of early life, but he met all his losses with fortitude, and moved on with the same equanimity of temper and cheerfulness that characterized him in youth. In this respect he was indeed a remarkable man, and a model for his fellow-citizens. No man was more esteemed than the deceased. He had no enemies and was beloved by all. He was a sincere christian and member of St. Luke's church for many years, and up to the last hour of consciousness on earth he maintained that calmness, serenity and abiding confidence in his faith which the real christian always possesses.

CHAPTER V.

PENUEL CHILD.

In few words we would call the especial attention of the reader to the founders of this branch of the Child family. As the homes in Connecticut and Massachusetts filled rapidly by the large number of children, (a fashion of that date not wholly dropped by the name even now, though not universal as of yore,) the sons and daughters went out to brave the perils and test the joys of pioneer life, as their grand-parents had done in coming to America. Indeed, we can but feel that just the kind of energy, fortitude, and unconquerableness which characterized those early Puritans, was an absolute necessity to enable them to attempt obtaining a livelihood from the Granite Hills. Nor can we doubt that the prophetic words of the Psalmist, and of Isaiah and Joel, were their strong staff: indeed, we can almost hear the sweet-voiced women reading those comfortable words, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." "For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing." When the crops were like to fail did they not gain courage from these further words: "And it shall come to pass in that day that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk." Nor can we marvel that looking upon the bent frames and toil-worn hands which had wrung by the hardest "sweat of the brow" the small farms from amid the rocks, that later generations should joyously turn them to the luxuriant prairies and oak-openings of the Western States.

[Third Generation.]

23. ix. Capt. Penuel Child, sixth son and ninth child of Capt. Benjamin and Grace Morris Child, b. in Roxbury, Mass., Sept. 3, 1699, m. March 7, 1724, Dorothy Dwight, dau. of Rev. Josiah and Mary Partridge Dwight of Woodstock, Ct. Rev. Josiah Dwight, father of Mrs. Penuel Child, was in the third generation from his earliest American ancestor, John Dwight, who came to the Massachusetts colony, in 1634 or 5, with his family then consisting of a wife and three children, one of whom was Capt. Timothy Dwight, the father of Rev. Josiah Dwight. Capt. Timothy Dwight married Anna Flint Dwight, daughter of Rev. Henry Dwight of Braintree, Mass. Rev. Josiah Dwight married Mary Partridge, daughter of Col. Samuel Partridge, of Hadley, Mass. Rev. Mr. Dwight was the first pastor of the Congregational church of Woodstock, Ct., (then New Roxbury), being settled there in the summer of 1690. Rev. Mr. Dwight was a man of strong will, perseverance, and real piety. We sketch thus specifically the parentage of Mrs. Child that test may be made of the proverb that "like begets like." Most honorable, and strictly religious, fervent and patriotic, were the ancestors of Mrs. Child. We claim no less for the progenitors of Mr. Penuel Child, the reader must be jury after the perusal of the record which will be as full and correct a portrayal of the descendants as it has been possible to obtain. It should be observed that Mrs. Child is one remove farther from her emigrating ancestor than her husband. We call attention to this fact that those possessing the most admirable "Genealogy of the Dwight Family," prepared by Rev. Prof. Dwight, D. D., LL.D., of Clinton, N.Y., may not imagine an error. In this work Mr. Child of course takes the lead, and in the other Mrs. Child follows her parents. Captain and Mrs. Penuel Child resided in Thompson, Ct. From Mr. Dwight’s Genealogy we quote what he there writes of Captain Penuel Child: “He joined the church at Thompson at its organization in 1730, and was appointed, as the records state, ‘quorister for us in the public worship.’ The gift of song was almost universal in the Child name, though none have been especially distinguished in the musical profession. Some ten children were given to Mr. and Mrs. Child, but Capt. Child did not live to see many of them entering upon their own independent careers; he died October 24, 1760. His widow, Mrs. Dorothy Dwight Child married on November 24, 1761, Robert Goddard of Sutton, Mass.

[Fourth Generation.] Children:

2478. i. Josiah Child, b. March 6, 1725, m. twice—1st, Feb. 6, 1745, Sarah Green of Thompson, Ct.; m. 2d, 1763, Sarah Adams of Killingly, Ct.

AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

[Fourth Generation.]
2378. i. Josiah Child, eldest son and child of Capt. Penuell and Dorothy Dwight Child, b. in Thompson, Ct., March 6, 1725. Mr. Josiah Child was married twice—1st, Feb. 6, 1745, Miss Sarah Green of Thompson, Ct., a dau. of Capt. Henry and Judith Guile Green, b. Sept. 21, 1696; m. 2d, Sept. 1, 1763, Sarah Adams of Killingly, Ct. Mr. Josiah Child, like his father, was a tiller of the soil—one of the staid, substantial people who have given the old "Nutmeg State" its wide-spread repute for shrewd steadiness.

[Fifth Generation.] Children:
2488. i. Benjamin Child.
2490. iii. Zeruiah (Gervish?) Child, bap. March 18, 1750, d. Dec. 6, 1754.
2496. ix. Dwight Child, b. about 1762.
2497. x. Jesse Child, b. about 1764.
2498. xi. Theodore Child, b. about 1766.
2499. xii. Michael Child, b. about 1768.

[Fifth Generation.]
2493. vi. Penuell Child, fourth son and sixth child of Josiah and Sarah Green Child, b. Feb. 22, 1757, m. about 1782 Sarah Woodward, who was b. Oct. 22, 1761. Mr. Penuell Child removed with his father to Sand Lake, (now East Poestenkill,) Rensselaer county, N. Y., "in the year of the cold summer," said to have been the year 1816. Here Mr. Child reared a large family, and here he died Jan. 16, 1813. Mrs. Sarah W. Child died Dec. 24, 1843.

1 The record of Theodore Child's family we hope to receive in season for the appendix.
[Sixth Generation.] Children:

2500. i. Lucinda Child, b. Oct. 17, 1783, m. John Amidon.

Mr. Horace Child accompanied his uncle, Jesse Child, to the county of Ashtabula, in Ohio, in the autumn of 1838. Here he found his wife. Soon after his marriage he returned to the State of New York, he was, however, not long content, but two years sufficed him, and he was again in Ohio. On the 30th November, 1849, he moved with his family, which consisted of a wife and four small children, to the township of Rome, Ashtabula Co., carrying his household-goods across Grand River on the stringers of a floating bridge, moving back into a heavy forest, half a mile. His house was fourteen by twenty feet, of his own building, cutting away the trees so they would not fall upon the house in the high winds; driving his cow and a few sheep nine miles round to get them to his new home. Then he began clearing off his farm, and as he had no team, he was obliged to draw his logs out from the woods by hand. But endowed with wonderful energy and perseverance, he succeeded in winning for his family a pleasant home and comfort. The hardships he endured bore heavily upon him, and before the three-score he passed peacefully to his death,—March 7, 1874, aged 56 years, 8 months and 10 days, leaving a wife and eight children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and indulgent parent.

Mr. Timothy Child, like most of his name who were of sufficient age, entered personally into the heroic struggle for national enfranchisement, and lived to enjoy the fruit of the victory, in the peaceful prosperity which speedily resulted. After his decease, his widow received a small pension in recognition of his services in the Revolutionary contest. In 1799 Mr. and Mrs. Child with their children, then numbering six, removed to Sullivan Co., New York. Here they labored, clearing off the forest trees, to make for themselves a home and farm, enduring many hardships unknown to the pioneer of to-day. "The first school established in the place," writes his youngest son, "was organized by my father's benevolence, in procuring a teacher and a few spelling-books. No grist mill nearer than Bloomingburgh, a distance of some sixteen miles, the road to which would now be hard travelling for a wood-road." The strong attachments to the New England homes, were everywhere evidenced in the repetition of the names of towns and hamlets, which were themselves in memoriam of the far away motherland. Mr. Timothy Child was no exception to this general local attachment, and gave to his new home in Sullivan county the name of his native place in Connecticut. After a life of honor and usefulness, Mr. Child died, Feb. 5, 1825. His widow survived him some twenty years, dying July 5, 1845.

In 1815, on May 9, he m. in Neversink, Charity Thompson, who was b. in Marbletown, Ulster Co., N. Y., Dec. 14, 1795, a dau. of John and Ann Thompson, of Neversink, Ulster Co., and afterwards of Homer, Cayuga Co., N. Y. A daughter of Mr. Obadiah Child (Mrs. Vrandenburg) sends us a most pleasant sketch of him:

"My father was a member of the Baptist church, an active and useful christian, always willing to make any sacrifice to attend with his family upon the services of the Sanctuary. A close student of the Bible, and remarkable or peculiar for his apt quotations of scripture in conversation. Gifted with a sweet power of melody, he delighted in the service of song, and was often the leader in this part of the services. A very favorite hymn was one commencing ‘Welcome, sweet day of rest.’ A fond husband, and indulgent father, he was ever ready to expend his means in the purchase of books and other methods for the education of his children: but exceedingly particular in the observance of the Sabbath. His last illness (typhoid fever) was brief but severe. On his last earthy Sabbath, a beautiful clear morning, he said: ‘This is Sunday, and I am very happy.’ ‘The time for the singing of birds has come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in the land.’ He died April 8th, 1867, at Wawarsing, Ulster Co., New York, and his memory is precious to us. Mrs. Charity Thompson Child, my mother, survived my father about nine years. She always enjoyed that ‘peace which passeth understanding, from her constant trust in Jesus. She loved the New Testament with a devotion seldom witnessed: her life was an ex-enlargification of the sweet spirit of Christ. I often thought her name suitable, for her life was love. She was very happy through her last short sickness. I asked her near the close, 'Are you happy trusting in Jesus?' Her answer, 'O yes; happier than I ever expected to be,' with such a light beaming on her countenance as I never saw elsewhere. She tried to say more, we could only understand 'pure in heart,' and then she entered into 'perfect peace.' March 9th, 1875, from Neversink, Sullivan Co. N. Y."

Has been m. twice—1st, in 1829, to Lois Ann Grant; 2d m., May 16, 1873, Mrs. Hoyt, widow of Charles Hoyt. Judge Child is a man of position in the town of Napanock, Ulster Co., N. Y., a man who may be accredited most emphatically self-made. His school training continued but twenty-seven days after he was twelve years old, yet from his sixteenth year to his twenty-second he taught in the winters, working upon his father's farm in the summer. The succeeding four years he served as clerk and manager at the Ulster Iron Works. In 1835 he moved to Sullivan Co., and was appointed under sheriff and served three years, and elected sheriff. In 1863 he was elected special county judge, and special surrogate, and served six years. In 1870, Judge Child settled in Napanock, and in 1878 served as justice of the sessions. He was admitted to the bar in 1858 at Albany, having prepared himself for his examination and practice of the law without a tutor, qualifying himself in like manner as a successful surveyor. In his seventy-fifth year he is yet in the active exercise of his profession, and serving as justice of the peace.

2691. iv. Capt. John Child, second son and fourth child of Richard and Abigail Green Child, b. in Thompson, Conn., March 11, 1766, m. Nov. 15, 1792, Martha Hutchins, who was b. in Haverhill, Essex Co., Mass., Jan. 9, 1778. Mrs. Martha Hutchins Child was a daughter of Jeremiah Hutchins, who had removed from Massachusetts to Bath, N. H., when Mrs. Child was very young. Mr. Child was early apprenticed to Mr. John May of Woodstock, Conn., a kinsman; this transaction was, therefore, not effected in a strictly legal manner. Upon attaining his majority the remuneration for his services was referred to two friends of Mr. May and Mr. Child, who settled the affair amicably or satisfactorily to each—in the quaint phraseology of the time "chalked a like amount"—which enabled Mr. Child to provide himself with an outfit, consisting of a French horse, a saddle and bridle, a suit of clothing and a gun—the cost of all perhaps would not exceed fifty dollars. Thus equipped Mr. Child joined his brother-in-law, Mr. Ezra Child, in Bath, N. H. More surely armed with cheerful determination and strong hope, he was so well skilled that he commanded readily the highest wages of the times, viz., $8 per month. The accumulations arising therefrom enabled him to marry in the simple style of the country, with stock consisting of his horse, a black cow (said to have "given blue milk,"), a black swine, and a black sheep. His competent husbandry soon increased his store and want was known only when the grain crop of one year scarce sufficed to meet the incoming harvest of the succeeding; this insufficiency of bread was met by the good black cow and plenty of potatoes. Mr. and Mrs. Child, indifferent to luxuries, found their happiness in meeting their labors with one will and heart, and trained a noble, handsome family of sons and daughters to be good citizens, true wives, and in time parents of a goodly posterity, honoring their name, and winning new honors for it in turn. Mr. Child d. in Bath. Grafton Co., N. H., April 18, 1841; Mrs. Child survived her husband some twenty-three years. For some years before her decease, her anniversary birthday was celebrated by the home gathering of children and grandchildren—the last occasion observed, in 1863, her descendants numbered 112. Gathered home like the full ripened grain, when past the four score and ten, she passed from earth in the full assurance of a comfortable hope, in 1864.

2901. viii. Hon. Dwight Penuel Child, third son and eighth child of Capt. John and Martha Hutchins Child, b. in Bath, N. H., July 9, 1810, m. May 16, 1833, Nancy May Child, b. April 8, 1814, in Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y., a daughter of Elisha and Nancy (Child) Child. It is often said that the external surroundings of early years leave strong imprint upon the mental and moral nature. We cannot doubt this, we can equally believe that the physical system is affected by these influences; and a gueflion of personal beauty seems the gift of the mountains to those born in their shadows. Upon this family of Capt. John and Martha Hutchins Child the dower of an attractive exterior has been widely bestowed, though unaccompanied with the vigorous health we are apt to believe assured to the dwellers among the hills. Hon. Dwight P. Child makes no departure from this inheritance and has helped to pass on the gift to a large family of honorable sons and daughters. Living upon the farm his father redeemed from the wilderness, Mr. Child’s dwelling faces the bold heights of the White Mountain range, not far removed, the lights and shadows ever diversifying the rugged sides and sharpened peaks afford constant interest and alluring charm. Here childhood, youth and manhood, have sped their swift years, bringing cares and troubles, but much more of joy and plenty. Fertile acres and full garners attest the joint inheritance of wise thrift and intelligent foresight. Serving his fellow-citizens for years as a town official, Hon. Mr. Child has also represented them in the halls of their State Legislature. The home has found its charm and true light in the mother whose modesty deprecates notice, but whose works praise her.

[Seventh Generation.] Children.

2954. i. William Graves Child, M. D., b. Feb. 4, 1834, m. 1st, March 18, 1858, Caroline Back Lang, she d. May 10, 1867; m. 2d, Sept. 3, 1868, Lavia Lang.

2954. i. Hon. William G. Child, M. D., eldest son and child of Hon. Dwight P. and Nancy May (Child) Child, b. in Bath, N. H., Feb. 4, 1834, and has twice married. His first marriage to Miss Caroline Buck Lang, March 18, 1858. Mrs. Caroline B. L. Child died May 10, 1867. Dr. Child m. second Miss Luvia Lang, Sept. 3, 1868; these ladies were sisters, and daughters of Sherburne and Mehitable Ricker Lang.

Dr. William G. Child read medicine in New York City, walking the hospitals there, and closed his medical course in the department of medicine of Dartmouth College, in Hanover, N. H., graduating in 1857. Dr. Child settled in Bath for his professional duties until the war of the Rebellion. Of his army life we quote the account given by Rev. Prof. B. W. Dwight in his Genealogy of the Dwight Family:

"He entered the U. S. A. of Vols., Aug. 13, 1862, as assistant surgeon in the 5th Regiment, N. H. Vols., and was commissioned surgeon in the same regiment, Nov. 4, 1864, and served until July, 1865, the close of the war. He was in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburgh, Brandy Station, Gettysburgh, Chancellorsville, Cold Harbor, Petersburgh, Deep Bottom, etc. While at Point Lookout, he was detailed to superintend the hospital for rebel prisoners of war, where he often had 500 men on the sick list. He had eight assistant surgeons under him, most of them rebels. He was present in the theatre when President Lincoln was shot."

When discharged from army service, Dr. Child returned to his native place, and resumed his practice, with greatly enlarged experience, and has taken a prominent position in the medical profession of the State. Dr. Child has made a special study of diseases arising from malarial influences, and of the hereditary transmission of disease. With a widely extended ride for practice, he has found time to serve honorably his constituents in the State Legislature. A very marvellous personal resemblance to the distinguished divine in Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, has resulted in much amusement to the genial M. D.

Of such uniform excellence and prominent citizenship was this family of Capt. John Child, that one might write a description of character and deed for one member and then apply it regularly to sons and sons-in-law indiscriminately, and yet this oneness of success has nowhere obliterated individuality of character. Enough of sterling sound sense, keen business ability, and uprightness of character remained to supply amply the eleventh child. The piercing yet genial, kindly black eye is surmounted with ample brain room, and crowned with the early almond blossoms of a gracious age, whose decades are scarce credited by the alert step and vigorous healthful figure; a most noble specimen of the New England thoughtful farmer. Mr. B. G. Child has graced the board of selectmen for his town, and held counsel on affairs of the State in its legislative halls at Concord, N. H. Of a large family, Mr. and Mrs. Child have been called to resign many to the “Stern Reaper whose name is Death.”

Dea Dudley Child removed when quite a young man to Bath, N. H., sharing with his brother, Capt. John Child, and his brother-in-law, Mr. Ezra Child, the privations incident to the settlement of a new country. These three families formed a nucleus around which a neighborhood of industrious, hardy and sober people gathered; laying the foundations of a prosperous community which grew rapidly in numbers and importance. When the religious element was embodied in a Congregational church, Dea. Child was early chosen an office-bearer, and served in the capacity of deacon with efficiency till his death. The Scotch element was a noticeable feature in the order and theological phase of this community, having been thus moulded by the Rev. Mr. Sutherland, a Scotch Presbyterian, whose impress remained upon this people long after the stern old divine had entered into his reward. Dea. Dudley Child died May 22, 1846. Mrs. Nancy (Child) Child died March 23, 1850. Her children were of her first marriage, Dea. Dudley's children of his union with Mrs. M. W. Child.

Mr. David Child as the elder son of a pioneer, made early acquaintance with the hardships inevitable in a new country. His surroundings, however, were not unfavorable to the development of sturdy and manly qualities, suited to fit him for a respected and useful citizenship in the town of his birth. His education was such as the town schools of that period afforded, and quite sufficient to awaken him to the full value and appreciation of good scholarship. His marriage to a worthy daughter of honorable parentage was the beginning of a new era and an added stimulus to his efforts in the life struggle. His industry and economy enabled him not only to gain a competence for himself and his growing family, but to accumulate a handsome property. In the spirit of enterprise, inherent and fostered, he left his native hills, with the honoring good-will of his townsmen, and settled in Nevada, Story Co., Iowa. Surrounded by a goodly family of sons and daughters, he expects here to spend the evening of life, trusting the honest toil of the morning will gild the sun-setting.

[Eightth Generation.] Child:

[Sixth Generation.]

Upon his father's decease, he was installed as possessor of the old homestead. From an elevation of land a few rods from his door, with a glass, one can discern the Summit House on Mount Washington, the highest point of ascent in the White Mountains: while the long panorama of mountains stretch out and up their bold, rugged peaks in full view. Mr. Dudley Child is the only one of his father's numerous family remaining in Bath. The fertile prairies of the West having allured most of them to imigrate. Mr. Child may be regarded one of the substantial citizens of the town: a man of steady habits, an excellent farmer, and a cordial supporter of the institutions of learning and religion. He and his cousins, Hons. Dwight R. and Bradley G. Child, share almost alternately the trusteeship of their school district.

3150. xi. Jonathan Child, sixth son and eleventh child of Dea. Dudley and Mary Weeks Child, b. in Bath, N. H., Feb. 10, 1821, m. in the same place by Rev. David Sutherland, Mch. 4, 1846, Martha Hutchins Walker, dau. of Hannah Child and Leonard Walker, of Bath. Mr. Jonathan Child, youngest but one of twelve children, came upon the stage of life after the severities of pioneer days in Bath were passed; he escaped therefore much which the elder brothers and sisters so courageously overcame. For him life opened with more of sunshine, the progress of society in matters civil and religious, rendered all its conditions easier. His natural endowments enabled him to command the respect of his fellow-citizens in his native town, while resident there, and qualified him to win equal honors and esteem when established in the western home, to which he removed in the spring of 1868. In the flourishing town of Grinnell, Iowa, Mr. Child has made for himself an honorable position. In all the ways through which he has been called to walk, he has found a true help-meet in his wife, whose honorable parentage guaranteed all which time has wrought out.

Y., a wealthy and influential farmer in that town. Mrs. Justus Childs was b. in Paris, Oneida Co., N. Y., Jan. 31, 1815. Mr. Childs d. May 24, 1868.

Mr. Justus Childs commenced active life as a farmer in the town of Paris, Oneida Co., N. Y., which occupation he successfully followed for a number of years, when from his accumulations he established himself in the manufacture of agricultural implements, in the city of Utica, N. Y. The business grew on his hands to large proportions, taxing his energies to an extent which seriously impared his health. In the prime of manhood and amid business activities, he fell into a decline which terminated his useful life. Mr. Childs was a man highly esteemed for his integrity, generosity and business talent.

CHAPTER VI.

JOSHUA CHILD.

The reader who has become familiar with the name of Mr. Isaac Child of Boston, who gathered much of the early statistics embodied in this work, will observe his descent from Benjamin the emigrant, through the Joshua Child who heads this Chapter.

[Second Generation.]

5. iii. JOSHUA CHILD, third child and son of Benjamin Child, the emigrant, b. in Roxbury, Mass., 1658. We learn the "Apostle Elliot" laid upon his head the consecrating waters of baptism, giving to him the name Joshua, on the 20th of June, 1658; at the same time, in like manner enfolding the elder sons Ephraim and Benjamin. The happy union of his brother Benjamin with Grace Morris, brought Joshua into pleasant friendship with the Morris family, and resulted in his alliance May 9, 1685, with Elizabeth Morris, a sister of Grace, she was born March 26, 1666. A memorandum upon a legal paper belonging to Mr. Benjamin Child, signed by Mr. Joshua Child, states that he had received his full part of the estate of his late father some time before; bestowed upon him doubtless by his father at the time of his marriage, with a view to his comfortable establishment in life. Mr. Joshua Child made his home a short distance west of the old homestead in the now pleasant village of Brookline, Mass. Here generation after generation of the family lived and died for nearly two hundred years. Mr. Joshua Child was a man much respected, and held numerous offices of importance and honor in this town up to the time of his decease. His health became much impaired, and entire loss of sight shadowed his latter days, so that his death on the 18th of January, 1729, was unto him indeed an entrance into light. The full patriarchal number of children graced this home, though not all of the twelve grew to maturity. Mrs. Elizabeth Morris Child died March 6, 1754, aged 88.

[Third Generation.] Children:

[Seventh Generation.] Children:

3417. i. Louisa Walker, b. Feb. 23, 1800.

[Sixth Generation.] 3413. ii. William Child, second child of Abijah and Lois Davis Child. Was a leading and successful merchant in Baltimore, Maryland. He was never married, but has left memorials in his successful and useful life, which his friends will be glad to preserve in these records. The knowledge of the history of Mr. Child as a representative man of the branch to which he belonged, obtained from one of the line, will justify some pleasant inferences:

It is a prominent feature in the characteristics that distinguish the family surname, that practical life partakes of the sober and robust cast, derived from the age in which the Puritans lived, and gave complexion to the moral and social phases of society. The successes of life, though not remarkably striking, with few exceptions have grown out of the vitalizing and enduring elements, which underlie the structure of substantial and prosperous communities. We find this happily illustrated in the brief history of Mr. William Child, second son of Mr. Abijah Child, of the 5th generation. His personal virtues were the basis of his active and useful life. They won for him the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens, and made him a benefactor to his race. His kinsmen may proudly cherish the memory of so worthy a representative of their line. The estimate in which he was held as a citizen of Baltimore may be seen in an article copied from the Baltimore American, on the occasion of his death February 11, 1862. It says:

"No citizen was more remarkable for his punctuality and uniformly regular deportment than the deceased, and his amiable and benevolent disposition was well known and endeared him to a large circle of intimate friends. The regularity of his habits may well be judged of when we state that for forty-eight years he never failed to appear at his counting room before breakfast, and during that long period he was never known to be absent from his pew in church. For the city of his adoption Mr. Child entertained the liveliest feelings of affection and regard; and when the invasion by the British took place, in 1814, he stood manfully in its defence in Fort McHenry. Cherishing warmly the principles of Christian philanthropy he shaped the whole action of his life by the golden rule of 'doing unto others as he would be done by.'"

Capt. Amasa Child, fourth child and second son of Abijah and Lois Davis Child, b. in Sturbridge, Mass., Meh. 21, 1784, m. Dec. 1, 1808, Cynthia Freeman, dau. of Comfort Freeman of Sturbridge. Of the substantial men of the period Mr. Child ranked among the most popular of his fellow towns- men for intelligence, sturdy principles and general prosperity. As a tiller of the soil he was prosperous, and successful in securing the means for a comfortable independence for himself and family. As a patriot he gave to his country willing and unconstrained service at the time of the British invasion of 1812. In this war he held a captain's commission and served to its close, when he was honorably discharged to serve his country in a civil capacity. His public services, as a representa- tive from the town of Sturbridge, for a term of years in suc- cession in the Massachusetts Legislature, are proofs of the confidence reposed in him by his fellow towns- men. He died in mature manhood, bequeathing to a large family of interesting sons and daughters the virtues of a worthy father.

3430. v. Anna Child, third dau. and fifth child of Amasa and Cynthia Freeman Child, b. in Sturbridge, Mass., Mech. 30, 1819. She was a teacher of pleasant memory, in Virginia and California; she died in the latter State Aug. 6, 1865, greatly respected and lamented, as well for her philanthropy as for her capacity as an instructor. The Boston Christian Register of September 3, 1865, pays the following deserved tribute to the memory of Miss Child:

"The subject of this notice, Miss Anna Child, whose death we chronicle to-day, was a native of Sturbridge, Mass. She became early in life a teacher in the South, but living in the midst of slavery her views in regard to it became gradually so much at variance with those with whom she daily associated that she found she must veil her sentiments, and sacrifice either her personal feelings or her sphere of usefulness there. She chose the latter and returned to the North, although in so doing she parted with many warm and estimable personal friends there. After spending some years at home, she determined to seek a new and enlarged sphere of doing good, and went to California, in 1859, in the same steamer that carried out our lamented Star King and family. She opened a school for girls there, which she continued to the time of her last illness, oftentimes receiving and instructing such as were unable to pay for it. She was a constant and sincere worshipper at the Unitarian church, and was an efficient and conscientious teacher in the Sunday-school, during Mr. King's ministry and since, and as Mr. Stebbins writes, 'found her own happiness in making others happy.' Her funeral was in the Unitarian church, Aug. 7, attended by many members of the Sunday-school and a goodly number of those who had been attracted by her unselfish goodness. At the regular teachers' meeting, held Aug. 14th, the following preamble and resolutions were passed:

'God in his infinite wisdom has removed one of our number by death. Miss Anna Child was for many years connected with this Sunday-school, and by her faithful and untiring service, her gentle disposition and unfailing love for the school, had won the esteem and affection of all who knew her. When we miss her from her sphere of duty, and wonder why one so useful should be so suddenly taken away; it is at least some consolation to believe that for her 'to die is gain,' still it is becoming us to recognise our loss, and to tender our sympathy to her bereaved friends. Therefore, Resolved, That the Superintendent be instructed to convey to the friends and family of Miss Child our sense of her worth, and the loss we have sustained in her death, and offer our sympathy with them in their bereavement.'

AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

Jan. 30, 1821, m. Abbie Cunningham Child, dau. of Joshua and Lucretia Dorr Child, who was b. 1817, d. May 20, 1874.

Mr. Addison Child is a thorough Anglo-Saxon in personnel, six feet in height, symmetrical in figure, and of a fine presence. A goodly inheritance of strong physical and mental qualities, have been developed and cultivated. The advantages of home and foreign travel have enlarged his powers, and in the refinement of cultured society he finds his true home. His literary attainments are finely shown in the able articles over his signature in the earlier part of this book. Of the mercantile house of Lewis Audenraid & Co., Boston, Mass., he has made his financial success a means of enjoying the delights of genuine rural life, in St. Lawrence Co., New York, devoting time and means to the best development of a wooded, hilly township. Looking to the future, he has stocked the lakes and streams from the fish nurseries of Western New York.

Oct. 4, 1812, Elizabeth Richards, dau. of Paul Dudley and Anna May Richards. She was b. Aug. 18, 1781, d. in Boston, Dec. 13, 1878. Mr. Child d. Nov. 28, 1840. The following obituary from the Boston Daily Journal of Mrs. Child will be read with interest:

"Death of a Remarkable Old Lady.—Mrs. Elizabeth Child, one of the oldest residents of Boston, died at her residence, No. 1 Hollis street, Friday morning, at the age of 97 years, 3 months, 25 days. About one year ago she ceased to go down stairs, but she has been able to walk about her chambers until within three months. She did not take her bed until within a short time of her decease, and she possessed her faculties until the last.

Mrs. Child was the daughter of Paul Dudley Richards, who died in 1832, at the age of 82 years, and was a descendant in a direct line of Thomas Dudley, one of the first Governors of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, the connecting links in the genealogical chain being Governor Joseph Dudley, William Dudley, Elizabeth Dudley Richards and Paul Dudley Richards. She was born August 18, 1781, on Bennet street, near the corner of Washington, her parents having but one other child, Joseph, who died in 1822. Marrying Mr. Richards Child, of this city, she had two children, both of whom she outlived. These children were Elizabeth, wife of the late Dr. Abel Ball (deceased in 1856), and Henry R. Child (deceased in 1847). Her husband died in 1840. At the present time her nearest living relatives are her grandson, Mr. Dudley R. Child of this city, and several nephews and nieces. For many years she has lived in the old house at the corner of Hollis and Washington streets, which was built by her father in 1790, he having purchased the land soon after the great fire of 1787, paying therefor the sum of $160. She has always lived within 200 yards of this spot. Mrs. Child was a woman of much intelligence, and retained her mental faculties to the last, not only possessing vivid recollections of old-time events but taking an interest in current events which led her to keep fully informed concerning them. Her eyesight was remarkable, and she never was obliged to use glasses, but up to a few weeks before her death she read for herself the news of the time as given in the columns of The Daily Journal, to which she has been a constant subscriber since 1861, at which time she gave up the Courier on account of its secession proclivities, which did not accord with her old-fashioned "Whig" sentiments. She was a devout christian and a member of the Hollis Street Church, in which she owned a pew inherited from her ancestors. She held pleasant memories of her former pastors,
Rev. Mr. Wight, Rev. Samuel West, Rev. Horace Holly, and others. Among her memories of general events was that of having seen Gen. Washington on Orange street, now Washington street, when she was about twelve years of age. In her charities Mrs. Child was unostentatious and actuated by good judgment. Her way of living was quiet and her disposition peaceful, and to these facts, together with her possession of a sound constitution, may be attributed the great length of her life. In some respects she was peculiar, never having been inside an omnibus horse-car or steam-car. Still she has visited the White Mountains, the State of Maine, and various parts of this State, always traveling, however, in a carriage or stage coach. Given to industry throughout her life, she was able to sew and knit to within a short time of her death. Her last days were comforted by the tender ministrations of her faithful companion, Miss Lydia Ball, who has resided with her over twenty-seven years. She was in many respects a very remarkable woman, and her decease removes one more of those who are living ties between the last century and the present.”

3468. i. ELIZABETH CHILD, b. in Boston, Mass., July 24, 1813, m. June 24, 1845, Dr. Abel Ball, of Northborough, Mass., son of Dr. Stephen Ball, of Northborough, Mass. He was b. in 1810. We are without the date of his death. The following brief notice is from the New England Historical and Genealogical Register:

“Dr. Ball studied medicine with his father in Northborough Mass. He received the degree of M. D. from Bowdoin College in 1857, since which he has been in the practice of dentistry. He married Elizabeth R. Child. The death of Dr. Ball was very sudden. He was on a visit to Philadelphia, and had attended the Centennial Exhibition during the day, and on his return to the Globe Hotel he fell dead in the wash-room in the act of putting his hand to the water faucet. The cause of his death was disease of the heart.

His relative and friend, Mr. Isaac Child, says of him: “His reputation for skill in his profession was very high. He was truly a man whom to know was to love. He had a heart as tender as a child, and his sympathies were ever ready to flow out to every one who needed them. His amiable and affectionate nature bound his friends to him in the strongest ties, and deep and universal will be the mourning for his sudden and unexpected departure.” He was admitted a member of the New England Historical Genealogical Society in Nov. 4, 1865.

[Sixth Generation.]

3461. vi. Isaac Child, 2d, sixth child and fifth son of Daniel and Rebecca Richards Child, b. in Newton, Mass., May 1, 1792, m. three times—1st, Nov. 22, 1821, Eliza Billings, dau. of Benjamin and Susanna Weld Billings of Roxbury, Mass., she was b. 1798; 2d, July 4, 1848, Maria M. Eastman, dau. of Phineas and Judith Gale Eastman of Franklin, N. H., she d. April 3, 1853, and he m. 3d, May 31, 1854, Abigail Baker, dau. of Eli Forbes Baker, Esq., of Steuben, Me., she was b. Mech. 7, 1816. Mrs. Eliza Billings Child was interred at West Roxbury, Mass., and Mrs. Maria Eastman Child at Forest Hill Cemetery, Roxbury.

Mr. Isaac Child by reason of his great age, eligible family connections, and many years of special devotion to genealogical research relating to our family name, is justly entitled to a pleasant notice in this connection. He was born in Roxbury, Mass., on the first of May, 1792, making his age at this date (Sept. 1, 1880,) 88 years and 4 months. One possessed of the physical and intellectual stamina, which it has been the fortune of Mr. Child to inherit from a robust ancestry, could scarcely live to his age without an instructive history of much interest. We should look for intelligence and manliness, and all the best results of an industrious and virtuous life. The channel of Mr. Child's activities has brought him in contact with men of intelligence and culture, and enabled him to have memories which future generations will contemplate with no little interest. His early life was spent in mercantile pursuits either in his own interest or that of others, which was characterized by efficiency and entire uprightness. During these many years of business employments, his reading and observation have been quite extensive, resulting in humane and benevolent views of life, as well as in the adoption of opinions and theories on moral and religious questions, which have drawn him aside from the generally accepted current systems of the present day. Without detracting from his moral worth he might be regarded as somewhat eccentric. Whether his mediunistic tendencies should be classed among his eccentricities we express no opinion. He claims, to quote his own language, "a foretaste of the future life as immediately connected with the present, as fully exhibited by the whole character of Jesus . . . . overlooked or evaded by the christian world of the present times." We discover in this no very great advance in christian experience over the rest of the christian world. And he adds: "Universal kindness, forgiveness, goodness, and unselfishness in every possible way are sure to raise us toward God and a happy future." There can be no doubt that these attainments are the legitimate fruits of true faith in Christ, which is the common belief of the bulk of professing christians. His moral honesty cannot be questioned. The drift of his researches for many years have been in the direction of genealogical lore and antique curiosities. Specimens of the latter constitute an unclassified cabinet full of interest. Here one lives among the ancients. The lessons afforded are suggestive of instructive and amusing events. It would be folly to call some of the results of a long life thus displayed, a waste of time, and a proof of an aimless life—each man fills a sphere, no man lives in vain. His emanations are full of instructive lessons that should be used to make us wiser and better. In the line of genealogical investigations in behalf of our family name, Mr. Child has been indefatigable. While bodily infirmities are bowing his once noble form, his mental powers are still remarkable for vigor. His domestic felicities have been shared and enhanced by three successive companions in holy wedlock, whose intelligence, amiability and moral worth have constituted no small part of his home comforts; the last of whom still lives to sympathize with and care for his declining years.
AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

[Seventh Generation.] Children of Isaac Child by 1st marriage:

3490. i. SOPHIA BUCKLAND CHILD, b. in Boston, Mass., Aug. 11, 1822, m. Sept. 15, 1842, James Guild, son of Samuel Guild, of Roxbury, Mass. She d. Dec. 2, 1857. They had no children.

By second marriage:

3491. ii. SUSAN REBECCA CHILD, b. in Boston, Mass., Sept. 21, 1855, d. Aug. 1858, at Steuben, Me. This was a remarkably mature child, and gave great promise for the future.

3492. iii. ELIZABETH BALL CHILD, b. June 1, 1858, d. July 30, 1860.

[Sixth Generation.]

3466. xi. DANIEL FRANKLIN CHILD, eleventh child and seventh son of Daniel and Rebecca Richards Child, b. in Roxbury, Mass., May 10, 1803, m. Nov. 4, 1829, Mary Davis Guild, dau. of Samuel and Mary Mears Guild. She was b. Dec. 23, 1807, d. Jan. 25, 1861. He d. suddenly Oct. 18, 1876.

Mr. Daniel F. Child is so thoroughly presented in the obituary notices of him in three of the leading papers of Boston, the Commonwealth, Transcript and Advertiser, that we feel we cannot do better than make excerpts therewith:

"He was connected with the Boston locomotive works and the Hinkley and Drury locomotive works, as treasurer, more than forty years. He was favored from youth to manhood with ample means for early training and education; whoever shared in the noble and characteristic justice of this man was made better and more happy for life thereby. Hospitable to new truth, though not carried away by delusion, he examined every new theory in physics and morals: and if his faith waned he was as frank in its abandonment as he had been chivalrous in its defence. A parishoner and warm friend of Theodore Parker; exceedingly tenacious of opinion, and firm as steel in his protest against public wrong. Mr. Child was in his private relations the most gentle and genial of men. He "Never found fault with you, never implied

Grew nobler, girls purer."

His nature seemed proof against trial; strong and sweet to the core. Some of the happiest hours of his life were passed in solitary visits to his farm in West Roxbury. He was on his way to this favorite haunt when, without a sigh, he passed away in the railway train, on the 18th October, 1876."

Immediately after marriage Mr. May removed to Woodstock, where he spent a long and useful life. We are indebted to the diary of this Mr. May, covering the years of 1711-12-13, for establishing the identity of John Child of Woodstock, who m. Elizabeth ——, as the tenth child of Benjamin Child the emigrant. Mr. John May was of the fourth generation in descent from his emigrant ancestor. His father was John May, born in Roxbury, Mass., May 19, 1663, married Prudence Bridge. His grandfather was John May, who was born in England, 1631, who, with his brother, Samuel, emigrated with their father to America. His great-grandfather, John May, was born in Mayfield, Sussex Co., England, 1590. He came to America in 1640, and settled in that part of Roxbury, Mass., known as Jamaica Plains. He married twice, the name of first wife, or date of marriage, is not given. She died 1651. Her death is mentioned by the "Apostle Elliot" where he says "Sister Maye died a very gracious and savory christian." His second marriage was to Sarah — —. According to tradition, Mr. May, was master of the vessel called The James, which, as early as 1635, sailed between the port of London and New England. He died April 28, 1670. Mrs. May died the same year.*

AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

[It is with very sincere regret that I learn upon the issue of my last circulars, announcing the completion of my work, that the record sent me of the descendants of Joshua Child, is quite incomplete, and also that numerous errors in dates and names are found in other families of this line, besides those herewith amended, yet too late to correct.

When I was preparing the material sent me of the Caleb Child who married Sarah Bramhall. I felt that there should be later report, and wrote to Mr. Isaac Child for some address by which I might obtain it, but could get none. In sending my last circulars I have found the grandchildren of this Rev. Caleb Child, and I most gladly welcome from them, especially Mr. Ethan Allen Doty, the following most interesting account of this talented man and his worthy and honorable descendants.

It may not be amiss to state in connection with this supplement that I have compared the record sent me of early history, with copies made personally, or by agents, of town records, in Woodstock, Ct., Upton, Deerfield, Rutland and Boston, Mass., and of the Roxbury church records.]

Rev. Caleb Child, M. D., whose record is very brief on page 425. was b. May 13, 1759, and m. July 21, 1799, Sarah Bramhall. In 1792 he went to Albany, N. Y., and opened a school there, with a recommendation signed by "Samuel West, minister of the Church of Christ, Hollis street, Boston."

"William Heath, late Major General in the American army. Roxbury," "and twenty other persons of respectability" to the effect that, "Mr. Caleb Child, the bearer, has taught school to general satisfaction, and with great success, in the neighborhood of this place for five years past, during which time he has occasionally supplied the pulpit at the Third Parish in Roxbury, having at a proper time, and in a regular manner, entered on the work of the Gospel ministry." In June, 1795, Deacon Caleb Child was recommended for admittance to the Order of Priests, by a certificate signed by Bishop Seabury and the Standing Committee of the Episcopal Church in Connecticut, and addressed to the Bishop of New York. He was granted a certificate as physician by Gilbert Livingston, Master in Chancery at Poughkeepsie, June 1, 1798, and March 3, 1803, was appointed by the Governor, "Surgeon of the Reg't of Militia in the county of Dutchess." From this time until his death he preached the Gospel, practicing at the same time as a physician, and for at least a portion of the time while residing in Troy, N. Y., kept an apothecary store. Rev. Dr. Child could not have filled all these varied callings, had he not been a very methodical man; a large volume of sermons in manuscript testifies to his power as a minister, as well as to his neatness as a penman. A medallion portrait of him on ivory, taken apparently about his fortieth year, remains in the family; it represents him in clerical costume, with a pleasing and attractive face, and strong characteristics. His marriage to Miss Bramhall was not pleasing to her parents, and the service was performed by William Lathrop, Esq., at the home of her uncle Elisha Barlow, Esq., the brother of her mother. The Bramhalls and Barlows were among the earliest settlers of Amenia, N. Y., the Bramhalls having come from Plymouth, Mass., and the Barlows from Sandwich on Cape Cod.

[Fifth Generation] Children:

F. 1
CHAPTER VII.

JOHN CHILD.

It seems necessary to introduce this line with a preface, as there has been some question as to its paternity, and it becomes us to state the premises and our reasons for the conclusion we have reached in the matter. Our first point will be the fact that Benjamin and Mary Child of Roxbury, Mass., emigrants to America, had a son John, their tenth child and fifth son. The second point is to identify said John and his descendants, as there are found two lines quite distinct in their homes and families who have been supposed to be his posterity. We will give then, here, the reasons for the conclusion attained.

We find that by far the larger number of the descendants of Benjamin Child, emigrant, removed from Roxbury to the colony established in the town now called Woodstock in Connecticut, though we have no evidence that any of his sons went there unless it should seem that his younger son John did go there. If we find John did go to Woodstock our perplexity ends. We have upon the Woodstock records the births of a large family of children to John and Elizabeth Child. At the time of the sending of the second delegation from Roxbury to the colony then called New Roxbury, seven sons of Benjamin Child, the second son of the Emigrant of that name, were old enough to go, some were married, others married after removing: John, the younger son of the emigrant, was not much the senior of some of his nephews, and might have felt he could better establish a family in the newer country. A very strong point in the presumptive proof (for we cannot call it positive) is that the families from those earlier times always held themselves to be closely allied; a stronger proof comes to us from an old diary of one John May, who married in 1711 Elizabeth Child, the daughter of Joshua Child, (Joshua being the son of Benjamin Child, the emigrant.) In this diary, which we have carefully read, we find Mr. May calls the John Child of Woodstock, Ct., "Uncle John," (as he would be the uncle of his wife Elizabeth Child May, if he were the son of the emigrant and so the brother of Joshua,) while Ephraim, Benjamin, &c., the grandchildren of the emigrant, he always calls "cousin." Others beside ourselves have examined the Woodstock records on this point, and entertain no doubt that the John whom we place at the head of this chapter, and whose long line of posterity we record, is the son of Benjamin Child, the emigrant. We therefore register him as we have done the others.

[Second Generation.]

[Third Generation.]
3643. ii. Nathaniel Child, second son and child of John and Elizabeth Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Sept. 3, 1699, m. Dec. 8, 1726, Dorothy Johnson. Mr. Nathaniel Child removed to Thompson, in the same county (Windham), and there reared a large family. But of several of his children we obtain no certain data, and can present but two sons with their descendants: These, however, rank with the noblest of the name for alert intelligence and probity.

3859. i. Nathaniel Child, b. abt. 1730, m. abt. 1765, Susannah Williams.

3839. i. Nathaniel Child, son of Nathaniel and Dorothy Johnson Child, b. abt. 1730, m. abt. 1765, Susannah Williams, of Burrelville, Rhode Island: a descendant of Roger Williams. Mr Child passed his long life of some ninety-six years in Thompson, Ct.; his occupation was that of a farmer.

*We have been informed that many of this family are living. We have sought them by advertising in the Webster, Mass., papers, and by correspondence, but vainly.
Nathaniel Child died April 11, 1864. Mrs. Nancy Whitford Child was born in Dudley, Mass., April 15, 1777, and died in Thompson, Ct., May 21, 1877, more than rounding out a century of life by thirty-six days.

[Fifth Generation.] Children:

3863. i. WALDO CHILD, b. June 24, 1805, m. Dec. 24, 1848, Ursula Young, dau. of Brazil and Melvina Young, of Killingly, Ct. They were married by Rev. Isaac Day. Mr. Waldo Child was a machinist. His death occurred April 27, 1878.

3868. vi. NANCY W. CHILD, b. Mech. 12, 1817, m. Anthony Emlott.

[Fifth Generation.]

3864. ii. HON. MARCUS CHILD, second son and child of Nathaniel and Nancy Whitford Child, b. in Thompson, Ct., Mech. 30, 1807, m. Sept. 16, 1830, by the Rev. Abial Williams of Hadley, Mass., Chloe Talbot, dau. of Simeon and Nancy Leach Talbot, of Killingly, Ct. Mr. Marcus Child resides in Wilsonville, a parish of the town of Thompson, Ct., and is both a farmer and manufacturer. He has twice represented the town in the State Legislature.

[Sixth Generation.] Children:

3869. i. JAMES L. CHILD, b. May 31, 1832, d. Sept. 6, 1832, at Webster, Mass.

3871. iii. NATHANIEL CHILD, b. June 17, 1836, at Killingly, Ct., m. by the Rev. Justin S. Barrows, Nov. 25, 1858, at Chicopee, Mass., Miss Annie A. Scott, daughter of Sylvester and Mary Ann White Scott, of Chicopee. Mr. Nathaniel Child enlisted on January 4, 1864, in the 14th unattached Co. of Mass. Heavy Artillery, afterwards Co. 1, 3d Regt. Heavy Artillery, (acting engineers and pontoons). Served until mustered out in September, 1865, at the close of the war, thus adding another name to the long roll of patriots, who have honored the Child blood and name. Mr. Child is by occupation a moulder, and is also a farmer in Thompson, Ct.

3873. v. JOSEPH B. CHILD, b. Mech. 11, 1851, m. Sept. 11, 1871, Annie E. Moseley, of Elgin, Ill, where Mr. Child resides.

[Sixth Generation.]

[Fifth Generation.]

[Sixth Generation.] Children:

3880. i. GERSHOM P. CHILD, b. March 14, 1835, m. May 12, 1858, Eliza J. Dennison.

3881. ii. FRED. R. CHILD, b. in Thompson, Ct., Oct. 20, 1853. Remembering that though it is said "Man shall not live by bread alone," yet that it is also said by the same authority, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread," Mr. Fred. Child caters for the "inner man" of his fellow-citizens by baking, amid the heat, their "daily bread."

[Sixth Generation.]

3880. i. GERSHOM P. CHILD, eldest son of Otis and Mary E. Rice Child, b. in Sturbridge, Mass., March 14, 1835, m. in Mystic, Ct., May 12, 1858, by Rev. Ebenezer Blake, Eliza J. Dennison, who was b. in Norwich, Ct., March 22, 1840, dau. of John J. and Olive Jillson Dennison of Groton, Ct. Like many others of this family Mr. Child has a double occupation, attending to a farm and superintending the weaving in one of the innumerable manufactories which cause the perpetual hum of industry with which the New England States resound.
BENJAMIN CHILD OF ROXBURY, MASS.

[Seventh Generation.] Children:
3882. i. MINNIE D. CHILD, b. in Thompson, Ct., Oct. 11, 1861.
3883. ii. LENNIE J. CHILD, b. in Thompson, Ct., March 4, 1865.

3840. ii. ELIJAH CHILD, son of Nathaniel and Dorothy Johnson Child, b. in Thompson, Ct., April 11, 1737, m. March 24. 1759, Rachel Palmer of Dudley, Mass. As the children attained their majority they removed to the State of Vermont; and about the year 1796 Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Child, with such of their family as had not preceded them, completed the exodus settling in Sharon, Vt. Mrs. Rachel Palmer Child was a more than ordinarily gifted woman, especially in her metrical talent. A poem of hers upon the celebrated "Dark Day," whose shadows fell at noon-tide and whose weird gloom she witnessed, was considered of much merit. It is unfortunately lost, so we may not hand it down to her descendants.

[Seventh Generation.] Children:
3389. i. ASA CHILD, b. Jan. 7, 1761. Enlisted in the Revolutionary army under legal age for a soldier, and fell a victim to the small-pox in 1777.

4148. i. Irene Child, eldest child of Abner and Achsah Carpenter Child, b. in Sharon, Vt., Sept. 22, 1801, m. in More-town, Aug. 25, 1822, Eber Hubbard Baxter, who was b. in Berlin, Vt., on Sept. 25, 1799. Is now (1879) residing in Cascade, Kent Co., Mich. Mr. Baxter is a man of strongly marked characteristics, noticeably successful in the results attending their development. Skeptical of the good wrought by physicians in the usual practice of the profession, he has not called one to prescribe in his family for fifty years; but has meantime reared a family of thirteen children, to man and womanhood. While yet residing in Vermont Mr. Baxter, beside holding many township offices, was chosen to represent the town of Fayston, Washington Co., Vt., in the State Legislature for several terms. In the year 1851 Mr Baxter, with his family, removed to Michigan, and has remained there in the enjoyment even now of unusual mental and physical vigor.

4158. i. ALBERT BAXTER, eldest child of Irene Child and Hon. Eber Hubbard Baxter, b. in Moretown, Vt., Aug. 3, 1823, m. in Fayston, Vt., Feb. 22, 1849, Elvira E. Guild. Mrs. E. E. Guild Baxter, d. Oct. 27, 1855. Mr. Baxter has not remarried. A boyhood in the vitalizing air of the Green Mountains, was strengthened in muscle by the farm training, and tutored in mind at the village school, with brief drill at higher academies. Albert Baxter began life for himself, as so many of his race have done, by wielding the birch, and doubtless teaching the youth of his native State. But he could not content himself with such a career, and soon after reaching his majority he left Vermont for that El Dorado of New England youth, the West. For a time he was an instructor in Wisconsin, but made his way to Grand Rapids, Mich. Of two trades he made himself master, but his real work was in neither. Buoyant with the hopes of early manhood, and fired by the very spirit of ’76, Mr. Baxter entered the political arena in the Peninsula State, joined with spirits akin to his own in their fervid zeal for righting wrongs, and turning the nation from that oppression of thousands which nullified her claim as a free republic. The minds of many had been almost unconsciously tending to an overturn in political sentiment, when these zealous souls sounded their bugle note, under a new banner, a host were found ready to join their ranks, and the republican party was a fact. Now Mr. Baxter found in journalism his true sphere, and the Grand Rapids Daily Eagle has winged forth the strong, earnest words of a broad patriotism, throughout the State of his adoption. The brief synopsis of the life of Mr. Albert Baxter has a moral, worthy of the study of all young men who desire to make their mark in the world. And if it is no higher motive than an ambition not to be excelled, the true method is contained in this history. But a worthier, higher motive seems to have prompted Mr. Baxter in his activities. His life has been marked by a steady devotion to honest principles, the love of country, and a desire for the highest good of the race. The strength of a matured manhood has not been wasted on impracticable theories. The steady aim of life with him has been the defence of right, and the maintenance of a truly republican form of government as instituted by the fathers. It is a noble life which all may gladly emulate.

Mr. Childs aided his father in clearing one of the densely wooded farms of Vermont. He built a saw-mill, which enabled them to dispose of the felled trees with profit; he also became noted as a mill-wright and builder of bridges. In 1838 he removed with his family to Illinois, settling in Mendota, La Salle Co. He is a thorough business man, a prosperous farmer, highly esteemed for honesty and fair dealing; has been postmaster, and for thirty years justice of the peace; now engaged in money loaning and land speculation.

When seventeen he left home and learned a carpenter’s trade, which he prosecuted some years diligently. He afterwards purchased a farm, and for some years resided upon it. Is a resident of Mendota, Ill.

[Sixth Generation.]

For the first thirty years of his life, Mr. Charles Childs remained with his father, when old enough to do so aiding in the culture of the farm, and in the operation of a saw-mill. One who has never seen a farm in New England can scarce apprehend one of the most unceasing labors of farming in that region, the removal of stone from the fields, which the plough yearly upturns with a persistant uniformity unequalled by the crops sown after the ploughing; to gather up the stones was an early task for the farmers' boys, and those returning from the soft, alluvial loam culture of the West to look upon the old homesteads, marvel at the courage which continues to cultivate the stony hills and valleys. To this labor Mr. Childs was early inured, and the limited scope of the country schooling, snatched at intervals from farm toil and mill tending, was all the training he received. But it proved sufficient to develop in him earnestness, thoroughness and practical skillfulness. The very atmosphere imparted vigor, and the moral surroundings wrought out true nobility and sterling integrity. In the spring of 1833, Mr. Childs bade farewell to New England and purchased him a farm in La Fayette, Medina Co., Ohio. Here he became soon a prominent citizen, noted for his excellent judgment, wise counsels, indomitable energy and a rare gift of "keeping his own counsel." "Early in the history of the township, he was elected to the position of justice of the peace, and retained the office some thirty years. For many years postmaster; and while ever true to his political party (republican), he was cordially esteemed by all. In the home relations he proved himself equally the true man, loving tenderly, wife and children. He was heartily lamented when he 'ceased from his labors' at threescore years and ten, on the first of March, 1873."

Ohio, Saturday Sept. 8, 1838, m. April 12, 1863. Mary Jane Chapin, dau. of Dea. Henry and Mary Mansfield Chapin of La Fayette, Ohio. The ancestors of Mrs. Mary Jane Chapin Childs came to America about twelve years later than those of Mr. Childs. The emigrant ancestor of Mrs. Childs was a Dea. Samuel Chapin, who settled in Springfield, Mass., in 1642, from Derbyshire, England, though considered of Welsh origin. The accompanying brief chronological descent of Mrs. Childs places her one generation farther removed from the first of her family resident in America than her husband:

1st Gen.—Dea. Samuel Chapin, 1642. 5th Gen.—Ebenezer Chapin.
2d " Japhet Chapin. 6th " Timothy Chapin.
3d " Ebenezer Chapin. 7th " Henry Chapin.
4th " Ebenezer Chapin. 8th " Mary Jane Chapin, 1879.

Upon their marriage Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Childs removed to Benzonia, Mich. In the autumn of 1866 they left Michigan for Durant, Cedar Co., Iowa. Remained there about two years, when for better educational advantages for their children they again changed their home and settled, as they think, permanently in Grinnell, Iowa, in which place Iowa College opens its doors for the higher training of the young in that growing State. Mr. and Mrs. Childs became united with the Congregational church in 1859.

4394. viii. WALDO CHILD, eighth child and second son of Samuel and Elizabeth Weld Child, b. in Woodstock, Ct., Aug. 15, 1777, m. abt. 1811, Mary Nicholson, eldest dau. of Wm B. Nicholson, a Revolutionary soldier: who removed from the East to Norwich, Chenango Co., N. Y., about 1806. His daughter, Mrs. Annah Amelia Child Randall, wife of Rev. Silas G. Randall of Providence, R. I., gives the following interesting sketch of her father and family:

“When he was six years of age his father died: and when he was ten his mother, with her numerous family, moved to Hartland, Vt. He had six sisters and two brothers. The sisters married in Vermont and most of them reared large families. When a young man, Waldo commenced teaching school, often having a hundred or more pupils, and as books were scarce, he was obliged to give them problems and lessons of his own originating, and for this he was fully competent, being a man of broad culture, a close thinker, and of a retentive memory. Though slender in person, he had indomitable courage and perseverance, combined with great social qualities and affable manners, which made him hosts of friends. In 1806, he made his way westward into the almost unknown portion of New York, the Chenango Valley. Where the flourishing village of Norwich now stands, one log hut alone marked the place. Five miles west of Norwich, in the town of Preston, he took up a tract of land, cleared off and improved many acres, and nearly paid for it, when to his consternation he discovered the agent to be a rascal. And after repeated efforts at great cost to retain it, he was obliged to lose it all. Nothing daunted, he took up more land and worked with renewed energy to make for himself a home. In 1811, he married Mary, eldest daughter of Wm. B. Nicholson, a soldier of the Revolution, who emigrated with his family from the East about the same time with himself. Here they lived happily many years, rearing a large family of children, eleven in number. In the winter of ’43, the typhoid fever, like a scourge, swept through the place, in a few weeks taking four from their number.”

4445. i. BENJAMIN CHILD, only child of Jacob Child by his wife Sybil Summer, b. in West Woodstock, Ct., Dec. 18, 1774. m. about 1803, Matilda Bolles, dau. of David and SusAnna Bolles. She was b. Sept. 22, 1783. Her father is said to have been the founder of the first Baptist church in Woodstock, Ct., whose organization occurred in February, 1766. (See Ammidown's Historical Sketches.) He was an active and influential member of the church. Two of his sons, (as we are informed by one of his descendants) Rev. Dr. Lucius and Rev. Mathew Bolles, were prominent Baptist clergymen in Boston. His daughter, Mrs. Benjamin Child, adhered to her father's form of faith, while her husband was not less attached to the doctrines and forms of the Congregational church in which he had been educated. But their different church relations seem not to have interrupted their domestic happiness. Mr. Child more Christian than sectarian in his feelings, like a good husband as he was, would on the hour of Sabbath service, drive some distance past the Congregational church and tenderly hand out his charming wife at the door of the Baptist church, and return and worship in the Congregational church, each regardful of the others conscience, not to say sectarian tenacity.

[Sixth Generation.]

4446. ii. ASA CHILD, second child of Jacob and eldest child of Jacob and Milethiah Curtis Child, b. in West Woodstock, Ct., Sept. 13, 1781, m. March 11, 1807, Alathea Stowell of Stafford, Ct. He d. July 1854; Mrs. Child d. Aug. 11, 1879. Four years after his marriage Mr. Child migrated to the town of Eaton, Madison Co., N. Y., and settled on a farm, where he resided for eleven years, when he removed to the town of Lenox, Madison Co., N. Y., and purchased a home, where he spent the balance of his life. The country was new and the settlers were exposed to many hardships. Mr. Child possessed the requisites for a successful pioneer—courage, energy and physical endurance. Among the early settlers of the township, he was an efficient element in laying the foundations of a prosperous community.
At an early day a Presbyterian church was organized in the town, of which he was constituted a ruling elder. For many years he was active and efficient in promoting its growth and usefulness, when party feeling, in 1834, rose high on the antislavery question and led to a rupture in the church. Mr. Child was a man of thorough convictions, and allowed his conscience to control his actions. In the belief that the church was derelict in its duty on this question, he left it and connected himself with a new organization known as a "Union church." He was a patriot in the fullest sense of the word, as well as a philanthropist. He was esteemed for his unselfish and manly characteristics.

Y.; she was b. in Lebanon, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1814. d. Oct. 2, 1868. He m. 2d, Servilia Gilbert Benedict, dau. of Stephen Benedict of Lebanon, N. Y. His children were by his first marriage. In his youth Mr. Child enjoyed the ordinary educational advantages of the period, and attained to a degree of intelligence that fitted him for responsible positions in life. At mature manhood he established a home of his own, as a farmer in the town of Lenox, Madison Co., N. Y., which yielded him fair accumulations. He identified himself in all the progressive movements inaugurated for the benefit of society, and shaped his conduct by deep and honest convictions of the right. In the anti-slavery agitations of an early period he is found in full sympathy with the bondman, and until his manacles were stricken from his limbs by the proclamation of the martyred President Lincoln, the wrongs of the slave ceased not to burden his heart. Following his honest convictions, he severed his connections with the church of his early relations and connected himself with an organization in church fellowship which held no communion with slaveholders or their sympathizers. Conscientious and upright, his christian influence has been stable and effective in the circles of his acquaintance. He has a quiet and pleasant home in the village of Canastota, Madison Co., N. Y.

Oct. 15, 1858. Mr. Child is still living with his daughter, Mrs. Mary C. Platt, wife of the late Rev. William Platt, at Ludlowville, N. Y., in his 94th year. Mrs. Platt has furnished the following sketch of her father, written December 1877:

"My father, Mr. Chester Child, is still living, in his 91st year, in perfect health and spirits—can work or walk all day long whenever he chooses. His hearing is but slightly impaired (some days not all perceptibly); his eyesight without glasses is dim, but with them he reads the Evening Post through every day of his life. Never misses a meal at the table, nor a night's rest. He takes a sponge bath of the whole person in cold water every morning before dressing, summer and winter, and sleeps in a cold room. He has a good set of natural teeth, upper and under, and a thick, heavy head of hair. He toasts his feet at the fire for more than two hours every night before retiring. This he has done for more than fifty years. At about forty years of age he gave up the use of his cigar (the only form in which he ever used tobacco), and has never resumed it since. Uses no liquors; is very simple in his diet; very neat and methodical in his habits. He has been so industrious in his whole long life, that he cannot bear any one who does not work. He wrote a Christmas letter to his son yesterday more broken than this, but quite as legible and distinct. I think I may safely presume that among your list of many names you can hardly have many whose age and comforts have exceeded my father's. He was engaged most of his life in New York City in active business, until about eight years ago, when he came into the country and made his home in my family, where he will probably spend the remainder of his days.

"Yours respectfully, Mary C. Platt."
In a postscript Mrs. Platt further adds:

"My father travels alone every summer from here to New York to visit his son, and from thence to Woodstock, Ct., to visit the old homestead, which is still in possession of his brother Hiram; and while upon this trip he takes in Boston and several other places where relatives live."

As intimated by the writer few can show a better record than Mr. Chester Child, the subject of this notice. And this little sketch furnishes a lesson in favor of correct habits, and daily occupation in some useful employment. Well may descendants be proud of so worthy an ancestor.

Mr. Platt was a respected Presbyterian clergyman. A native of New York City, in youth he united with Rev. Dr. William Adam's church in Broom street, graduated at Union College, Schenectady, in 1840, and later at Union Theological Seminary, New York City, and was ordained by New York Presbytery. As a pastor he was beloved for his devotion, his efficiency and tender ministrations. Disciplined by sore affliction and bodily infirmities, his heart was touched at the sufferings of others, which awakened his sympathies and called forth from his lips words of consolation and assurance. His life terminated peacefully at his home, October 30th, 1880.

CHAPTER VIII.

WILLIAM CHILD.

[First Generation.]

4541. Mr. William Child, one of the early emigrants to the Massachusetts colony, appears from such evidence as we can attain, to have been the brother of Ephraim Child, and to have come to America either with his brother or shortly before him. We have again to state that the necessity for a quiet leaving the mother country, led to most incomplete lists of the passengers in the sailing vessels, and compels the historian of to-day to obtain dates by a comparison of events and deeds. Mr. William Child was made freeman in 1634, and was a man of some landed estate. He seems to have married in England, and probably his son Joseph was born there, as we have no record of his birth, while Richard and John are found on the Watertown records as born in that town in the years 1631 and 1636. Mr. Child seems to have died early, a victim to the severe climate. His widow is mentioned in the will of Mrs. Elizabeth Palmer Child, who leaves to her some of her wardrobe, which was more ample and luxurious than that of most of the colonists. Mr. Ephraim Child was a true friend to these nephews while living, and left them portions of his estate upon his decease, though his grand-nephew and namesake, Ephraim Child, son of Benjamin Child of Roxbury, was his acknowledged heir.

[Second Generation.] Children:

Children:

4703. iii. SHUBAEL CHILD, third son and child of Richard and Mehitable Dimmick Child, b. in Watertown, Mass., Dec. 19, 1665, m. Oct. 27, 1687, Abigail Saunders. After the birth of two children, Mr. Child suffered from mental aberration. Very great ignorance or apathy, rendered the condition of the insane at this period, and even at a later date, one of much needless suffering. Sympathy with this greatest possible misfortune, was lost in terror of the possible acts of the victims; even the medical faculty did little to cure, or alleviate the disease. No suitable retreats were provided; and when the disease became violent in its demonstrations, close confinement in some subterranean room, or prison cell was the doom of the unfortunate. Mr. Shubael Child was condemned to this fearful fate, and died from exposure to the rigors of a New England winter, in an unwarmed cell of the county prison. On the tenth of July, 1694, a petition was presented in the Court; in the quaint phraseology of the day, "In behalf of Shubael Child, formerly out of his head, who was frozen in the county prison." Of the exact nature of this address we are not apprised, but as Mr. Child could not then be benefitted thereby, we presume it in the interest of the widow and children so grievously afflicted. The two children grew to manhood, the elder, Mr. Richard Child, named for his grandfather, died when only twenty-two.

4731. i. TABITHA CHILD, b. Feb. 14, 1742.
4732. ii. JOHN CHILD, Jr., b. Feb. 15, 1744.

[Second Generation.]

4544. iii. JOHN CHILD, third son and child, as it appears, of William Child was born after his parents removal to America, in 1636, in Watertown, Mass.; m. 1st, Mary —— : m. 2d, May 29, 1668, Mary Warren, who was b. Nov. 29, 1651, and was a granddaughter of John Warren, who came to America in the "Arabella" with Governor Winthrop, in 1630. As it has been deemed probable from certain circumstantial evidence that Ephraim Child, of Watertown, came to New England with Gov. Winthrop; it is also presumable that William accompanied his brother. Mr. Warren, the grandfather of Mrs. M.W. Child, was one of the selectmen of Watertown, and a prominent citizen, though some amusing entries found in the town records, which were also church records, would indicate the source whence some of his descendants have drawn their independence of character, and departure from the early established orthodox views. First, we find "John Warren fined, Oct. 1651, twenty shillings for an offence against the laws of baptism"; second, "John Warren fined, April 4, 1654, for neglect of public worship, fourteen Sabbaths, at five shillings each, total £3 10s." Absenting oneself from church in those days a somewhat expensive luxury. The Warren family was most creditably and prominently known in the colonial and state history of Massachusetts, notwithstanding the eccentricities of their ancestor. Mr. John Child took a prominent part in the affairs of town and colony, and was chosen representative to the General Court of Massachusetts. He became the head of a large line of posterity, who have honored the name. By a nuncupative will, witnessed by his brother Richard and two others, he left to his eldest son, John, his "dwelling house with its lot of twelve acres, also some meadow lands," and "the reversion of all lands upon the little plains." His youngest son, Daniel, received his farm lands. Mr. Child died Oct. 15, 1676, æ. 40. Mrs. Child remarried; and d. May 12, 1734, æ. 83.

[Third Generation.]

Children:

4733. i. MARY Child, b. Jan. 8, 1663.
4735. iii. ELIZA Child, b. July 24, 1670.

[Third Generation.]

4734. ii. JOHN Child, eldest son of John Child, and eldest child of John and Mary Warren Child, b. in Watertown, Mass., April 25, 1669, m. Oct. 5, 1693, Hannah French, dau. of Capt. William French, who was the first representative of the town of Billerica, Mass., to the General Court in 1666. Mr. Child resided in the west precinct of Watertown, of which he was chosen, in 1721, one of the "committee to manage the prudentials." This precinct was, in 1730, incorporated a separate town, called Waltham, and he was of the committee chosen "to take effectual care that learning shall be advanced." He possessed property in Waltham and Weston. He d. in Waltham, 1743, æ. 73. Mrs. H. F. Child d. Jan. 2, 1766, æ. 90. Mr. Child had been a representative, like his father, in the General Court. His children were born in Watertown.

Miss Parker is thought to be a descendant of Capt. James Parker, a noted citizen of Groton, Mass. Some notice of him is found in the history of that town by Butler. Mr. and Mrs. Child settled in Grafton, Worcester Co., Mass., where they reared a large family. Mrs. A. P. Child d. Mch. 3, 1756. The following quaint epitaph is upon the head stone now standing in one of the ancient cemeteries of Grafton, which marks the last resting place of Mr. Jonathan Child.*

"Here lies buried the body of Mr. Jonathan Child, Who departed this life Sept. 8th, 1787, in the 92 year of his age.
Behold and see as you pass by,
As you are now so once was I,
As I am now so you must be,
Prepare for death and follow me."

4735. i. Josiah Child, eldest son and child of Jonathan and Abigail Parker Child, b. in Grafton, Mass., Oct. 17, 1730, m. April 24, 1755, Elizabeth Ball of Westboro, Mass. About 1760 Mr. and Mrs. Child removed to Upton, Mass., where he purchased a farm, and was ever after known as one of the substantial and reliable citizens, though not found much in public affairs. It may be with propriety mentioned here that part of the descendants of Mr. Josiah Child use the terminal "s" upon their name; it is found that in the later years of Mr. Child's life some records of business on the Upton town books have the "s," and a like statement may be made of his son Asa Child. A descendant of Mr. Asa Child, Mr. Walter Childs of San Francisco, Cal., (who sends us the pleasing narratives in his line,) expresses the very earnest hope that "a return to the more correct and euphonious mode of spelling and speaking the name will not be delayed." Upon these venerated ancestors the blame rests, and between them we must divide the responsibility. Three of Mr. Child's children were born in Grafton, the others after his removal to Upton. 1799, MRS. CLARISSA PARTRIDGE IDE. MRS. R. T. Childs was the dau of John Taft, Esq., town treasurer of Upton, and a niece of Capt. Robt. Taft of the army of the Revolution. At the time of his first marriage Col. Childs was about seventeen years of age, his bride not fifteen. MRS. R. T. Childs d. in 1798. A touch of romance attended the acquaintance with the second wife. Some time before meeting her Col. Childs dreamed one night that he was riding, and came in view of a house which he felt impelled to enter, upon doing so he was captivated by the sight of the woman he was to marry, and then awoke. The vividness of the dream, which abode with him some time, was fading, when renewed by a curious experience. Business called him to Norfolk Co.; he was riding upon a road new to him, but was impressed by its strange familiarity, for which he could not account until he saw before him the house of his dream, which he determined at once to verify. Dismounting he made easy pretext for entering, and actually met with the fair lady of the vision, who was none other than Mrs. Clarissa P. Ide. The attraction was mutual.

Mrs. Ide was the widow of Gregory Ide, and a descendant in

priets of Medway, Mass., in 1650. Mrs. C. P. I. Childs was b. June 14, 1775.

Col. Childs' boyhood was ennobled and enriched by the thrilling events of the War of the Revolution. A lad of eight years, mounted upon a horse in his father's field, he was startled by the firing in the memorable Concord fight of April 19, 1775. Sept. 4, 1792, we find he was commissioned Ensign of the 2d Mass. Inf.; on Sept. 10, 1780, made Lieut.; and Captain Sept. 29, 1801. April 22, 1805, made Major; and further promoted Lieut. Col. and Commandant of the Regiment in 1809. His military service extending through the administrations of Governors Hancock, Adams, Sumner, Gill, Strong, Sullivan, Lincoln and Gore. A commission in the regular army, tendered him in recognition of his military ability, he was compelled to decline.

Col. Childs was a man of superior personal appearance, six feet one inch in height, finely proportioned, and of erect carriage. Social, affectionate, full of humor, and affable in manner, he readily made and retained friends. He was fond of fine horses, and appeared at his best when mounted; even in his eighty-first year he used to ride a spirited grey, and contests between rider and steed were said to have been exhibitions of rare horsemanship.

Col. Childs was early a successful business man, and before 1808 possessed a comfortable fortune; at that time he became security for a friend who was engaged in the manufacture of arms, under a government contract. The embargo of 1807 so raised the price of materials as to embarrass the friend, and lead to his failure. Col. Childs assumed the contract and completed it, though at the loss of almost his entire fortune. This unsettled him in home and business relations. For three years we find him seeking opportunity to retrieve his losses. For brief periods he was in Pawtucket and Providence, R. I., and in New York City. Unsatisfied with the openings for business, Col. Childs determined, in 1817, to go to the far West. In the summer of that year he went with his family to Buffalo, and thence to the upper waters of the Alleghany river. Here a flat boat was procured, laden with his household effects; and with his family he embarked, intending, if necessary, to go to the Mississippi to secure a home. Upon reaching Pittsburgh, Pa., the illness of one of the children compelled them to stop for medical aid. The boat was anchored opposite the Alleghany arsenal, whose commandant, Major Abram R. Wooley, proved a very true friend. Stone buildings were in process of erection at the arsenal, and Major Wooley offered Col. Childs the superintendency of the government quarries. This position was gladly accepted, and proved the turning of the tide of misfortunes. For two years Col. Childs retained this post under Major Wooley. Subsequently he leased a large farm in the suburbs of Birmingham, but left it for more lucrative business in Pittsburgh, in 1822. Here, through the success of his sons, he was again in the enjoyment of an easy competence, and his later years were passed in the love and honor of his posterity, and the respect of his fellow-citizens. On Nov. 4, 1849, his cherished wife was called suddenly to the heavenly home, after a loving companionship of half a century. So great was the bereavement Col. Childs could not support it, and about two months later, Jan. 9, 1850, they were reunited.

4823. ix. HARVEY CHILDs, ninth child of Col. Asa and second child and son of Col. Asa and Clarissa P. Childs, b. in Upton, Mass., Mch. 10, 1802. m. Jan. 5, 1829, Jane Bailey Lowrie, eldest dau. of Hon. Mathew B. Lowrie of Pittsburgh, Pa. The losses sustained by Col. Asa Childs from 1808 to 1814, made it possible for him to furnish his sons, Harvey and Asa P., with but little pecuniary capital for their start in life; this proved but a temporary disadvantage. Possessed of winning social qualities, and trained to regard honor and honesty first, and success as secondary in the life race, these young men were not long in gaining friends and the confidence of the growing community which had become their home. Devotedly attached to each other, their intercourse was ever characterised by a courtesy which was the rivet in the loving kindness of their daily lives, as charming to witness as it was rare: indeed this harmony and trust contributed in no small degree to the success attending the various enterprises in which they were interested.

The brothers began business in Pittsburgh as boot and shoe merchants, in 1826. Their near neighbor, Mr. John Albree of Boston, (who married a daughter of Stephen Child, Esq. of Boston—recorded on page 282,) came to Pittsburgh in 1817, and established the first wholesale boot and shoe house west of the Allegheny Mountains. In 1830, Mr. Albree, who had closely observed the young Childs' firm, extended the compliment of an offer of partnership to the elder brother, Mr. Harvey Childs. In 1831, Mr. Childs, with Mr. Albree, began a business career noted for sterling integrity and prosperous development. This was before the days of railways, and transfers of commodities from the east were made by "Conestoga wagons," over the now almost forgotten national road. The firm enjoyed for several years the monopoly of their specialty, and did a large and profitable business. Mr. Childs made frequent trips by stage to Boston, to purchase goods, and frequently obliged the Pittsburgh banks by carrying their eastern remittances, concealed within his personal baggage. In 1841, Mr. Albree, having amassed a fortune, returned to Boston. Mr. Harvey and Mr. Asa P.
Childs formed a new partnership which continued until the failing health of Mr. A. P. Childs, in 1860, led to his withdrawal from business. Mr. Harvey Childs remained at the head of the house sixteen years longer, leaving then his son, Harvey Childs, Jr., to continue the well established house. Fifty years of active business life, in which Mr. Childs held many positions of honor and trust, closely identified with many of the prominent industries which have developed the resources of western Pennsylvania. In 1836, the Exchange Bank was founded (now the wealthiest corporation of its kind in the city). Mr. Childs was elected a director. In 1847, he was elected trustee of the Western Theological Seminary, and in 1863, to the same office in the Western University. He was a director of the Allegheny Insurance Co., at its organization in 1859, an incorporator of the Real Estate Savings Bank; holding all of these positions until his death, in some cases forty years. He was a founder and manager of the Penn. Cotton Mill, Pearl Flouring Mill, Wampum Iron Furnace, Hope Cotton Mills and Union Woolen Mills, all large manufactories. With all these enterprises, demanding each more or less of personal attention, it will be seen that Mr. Childs was both a man of business and a busy man. Yet there was no fact regarding his character more striking than that he never allowed business to become the master. He was never too busy to be polite, though the interruption came from a beggar. His reputation as a benevolent and public-spirited man, arose from a truer source than mere external generosity of purse and time; only those conversant with his daily life can estimate the amount of self-sacrifice cheerfully rendered to all who were unfortunate. His ready sympathy and geniality endeared him especially to young men, and enabled him to exercise over them a most beneficent influence. He regarded a thorough education, combined with honorable principles, the noblest and surest endowment, and to his children secured the choicest advantages. Mr. Harvey Childs died at "Shadyside," Pittsburgh, Pa., May 17, 1876. Expressions, both public and private, of regret and respect, were numerous in the city where he was so much beloved, and with whose interests he had been identified for half a century; during which time he never failed to meet an obligation, nor abused a trust reposed in him. A promi-
Pittsburgh journal briefly expressed the general sentiment:

"In all his personal intercourse, a charming amenity was ever observed. Millions of values have passed through his hands, and his name has never been tarnished by a doubt of his high-toned, sterling integrity. No man of his day was more truthful and conscientious in every word and deed."

Six feet in height, Col. Childs' distinguished personnel, combined with a manly grace and frank sociability, won for him quick confidence and esteem from every rank in life. Graduating from Miami College, Oxford, Ohio, with the class of 1852, he spent the succeeding year with the corps of engineers in surveying the route of the Pittsburgh and Connellsville railway. Col. Childs soon after entered regular business life, becoming a partner in a large manufacturing establishment. The breaking out of war, in 1861, found him enrolled with the first to respond to the call for troops, in the 12th Regt., Penna. Volunteers. During the three months' service he was first lieutenant of the "City Guard" Co. of Pittsburgh. Upon the disbandment of the 12th Regiment, though surrounded by every home allurement, Col. Childs quickly arranged his affairs for an indefinite absence; quietly saying to his family that "a man's first duty is to his country, and that no alternative presented itself to him but to remain in the field until relieved by death or the close of the war." On Oct. 18, 1861, he was again mustered into service as Lieut. Col. of the 4th Penna. Cavalry, and at once joined his regiment. His soldierly bearing and personal qualities soon won the admiration and respect of his comrades, and he was presented with a sash, belt and sabre of fine workmanship, accompanied with a complimentary letter from the officers of the regiment. While encamped near Washington, D. C., Col. Childs was appointed provost marshal of Georgetown, a post demanding tact and executive ability, which he clearly displayed. At the unanimous request of the regiment, he was, on March 12, 1862, promoted to the Colonelcy. Wearied with the tedium of an encampment, Col. Childs sought service near Richmond where conflict was daily expected, and rejoiced when the summons came to proceed to the Peninsula. Upon arriving he was ordered with the Pennsylvania Reserves to the front, and took position the night before the series of terrible struggles known as the "seven days battles." An incident of the first day is worthy of note, as it established his reputation for cool judgment. His regiment, and the 5th Regt., Cav., were ordered to fall back from a charge upon the enemy's infantry, who were found impregnable entrenched against cavalry. The regulars left the field at a trot; Col. Childs to the surprise of the division forced his men to leave at a walk. When asked his reason, he replied it might do to trot off a regiment accustomed to fire, but such an experiment tried on untested troops like his would result in the trot becoming a gallop, and the gallop a stampede, and he did not propose to have his men run from the first fire. A few days later his undaunted firmness saved his command from disastrous route. Did the limits of our book permit many other characteristic deeds could be related of him. By the illness of Gen. Averill, to whose brigade the 4th Penna.
Cav. was attached. Col. Childs came into command, and was ordered by Gen. McClellan to pursue the flying column of the enemy's cavalry. Returning from the pursuit on the day of the battle of South Mountain, the brigade advanced to the Antietam river. The following morning, Sept. 17, 1862, was fought the sanguinary battle of Antietam. Col. Childs, while leading his brigade under a heavy fire, was struck in the thigh by a solid shot and hurled from his horse. Recognizing the fatal nature of the wound, he dispatched an aid to Gen. Pleasanton to tell him that he was dying, gave other needed official orders, then turning to his adjutant and personal friend, Capt. King of Pittsburg, confided to him his farewell messages of love to his wife and family. To his little son, Howe, he sent his watch and said, "Tell him to be a good boy and a useful man, and true to his country." A few minutes later death released him from all pain. He was, said Lieut. Hughes, "All that we could desire as an officer and a gentleman; a braver man never lived, and never braver died." The death of Col. Childs awakened deep feeling in his native city. From one of the many tributes to his memory in the city press, we quote:

"We have already announced the death of this brave young officer on the bloody field of the Potomac. From the very beginning of the war he has been a devoted soldier of the republic. Surrounded by all that makes life pleasant, wealth, social ties of the most sacred character, in the prime of manhood and usefulness, he left all to fight for the constitution of his country and restoration of the Union. He went into the field a true soldier. Modest and unassuming, he went to fight in whatever position he might be placed. He sought no notoriety. His aim was to do his duty to his fellow-men, his country and his God. He has left a glorious name, one of which his children will be proud, and has died the death of a soldier."

Born on the anniversary of our national independence, he closed his short noble life on the anniversary day of the adoption of the federal constitution.

4857. vii. Sergt. Major GEORGE ASA CHILDS, fifth son of Asa P. and Frances C. Bradley Childs, b. in Pittsburgh, Pa., March 23, 1842, d. from wounds received in battle May 17, 1864.

Securing his father's permission to enter the army at the age of twenty, he at once enlisted as a private in the 14th Penna. Cavalry, commanded by his friend, Col. Jas. A. Schoonmaker, of Pittsburgh. From the interesting account given by Col. Schoonmaker, of the army career of Sergt. Major Childs, we extract the following:

"George enlisted July 3, 1863, while I was upon a short leave of absence at Pittsburgh, and the next day started with me for Beverly, W. Va. Upon reaching Grafton, news came that the enemy had attacked the Fourteenth, and my horse was in waiting. Here George first showed his pluck, by insisting upon accompanying me to the front, although the only available horse was unprovided with either saddle or bridle. These George improvised by means of a blanket and rope, and thus equipped he rode forty miles in half a day. On the 8th July, 1862, George was promoted to be sergeant major of the regiment, and assigned to headquarters for special duties. This appointment was fortunate, for George possessed brilliant qualifications for adjutant duty, while his gaiety and good-fellowship made him a universal favorite not only with the officers of the Fourteenth, but throughout the brigade."
George participated in the 'Rocky Gap Raid,' but it was not until November 1st, at the fight of Droop Mountain, that he had an opportunity to take part in a general engagement, and I saw what was in him. The enemy was entrenched with artillery at the summit of a pass, and the obstructions rendered it necessary to dismount and fight our way on foot. The summit was carried by assault, and George's conspicuous gallantry on this occasion, won the admiration of the old soldiers, and satisfied all that he was a boy in years only. In December we were ordered upon the expedition known as Averell's Salem Raid, which was eminently successful, although the return was one of constant peril and much suffering. The weather was intensely cold. Streams easily forded in the advance were found swollen and full of ice. The horses were smooth shod and could not be ridden, and the men had to drag the cannons and ambulances. Many of the men reached Beverly half naked and crippled for life. Averell says in his report, 'My command has marched, climbed, slidden and swam 345 miles since the 8th, throughout this terrible retreat.' George was the life of us all at headquarters. No suffering could dishearten him, and he never failed in his duty. He took charge of the entire regimental records, carrying them in a haversack upon his back.

On the 2d of April, 1864, the brigade again took the field. On the 10th of May we encountered Morgan, and the bloody battle of Cove Gap was fought. During the engagement I gave George a pressing dispatch to be conveyed to the general. He bowed in assent, and the next thing I saw of the boy, he was dashing straight across the field in the face of the enemy, who was advancing at short range. Averell, who had witnessed his coming with some anxiety, demanded why he had not made a détour to escape the balls, to which George, saluting, delivered the dispatch with 'Excuse me, general; but I thought a straight line was the shortest distance between the two points.' The adjutant and both staff orderlies had been shot down, and when George returned from the general, I assigned him to the position of adjutant. He was assisting me, with his accustomed dash and gallantry, to reform our line of battle, when he was shot in the right side. The bullet passed through the intestines and lodging just under the skin on the left side. Despite the wound, he straightened up upon his horse and wished to remain in action, but I directed an orderly to conduct him to the rear. The enemy's artillery coming up, decided the day against us, and in the retreat, which lasted all night, over mountain roads, George kept on his horse. The next day we were forced to bid him farewell in the enemy's country, for suffering and weakness at last conquered, and he could ride no further. All that could be done was to carry him into a neighboring farm-house, dress his wound and arrange to have a doctor called from the nearest town. We offered to leave a soldier to take care of him, but this he refused, saying that any one remaining would be exposed to capture. We were compelled to leave him, and he never returned to receive the commission so well earned, as death ensued about a month later.

From a northern lady, a Miss Delano, who was living at Mechanicsburg and who showed the wounded soldier much kindness, his family afterward learned that Sergt. Major Childs was rallying, with a fair prospect of recovery, when a band of guerrillas came to the house and subjected him to the most brutal treatment, robbing him of money and everything of value, even to his clothing, and threatening to hang him. They finally left him so nearly dead that a relapse ensued, and he expired the following day.

"As an adjutant," says Col. Schoonmaker, "I have never known his superior. His dispatches, written in the midst of action, were models of terseness and comprehensiveness. Perfectly cool in every emergency, I never knew him to manifest the slightest fear, nor lose the habitual courtesy of his demeanor."

Animated by the restless spirit and tireless energy which makes the best pioneer material, he could not content him to remain in the Massachusetts colony, then becoming an old community as it had always been a staid one, but found his way into the "Granite State" and settled in the hill country, so thickly wooded, of Henniker, Merrimac Co. The first emigrants to this State were largely from the north of Ireland, transplanted Scotch, sent there from Scotland to leaven the Roman Catholicism of the Emerald Isle, failing which, they found sweet refuge in the wilds of this mountainous region, whose scenery and climate were akin to their loved Scotia. In a community thus penetrated with the sincere piety, sterling sense, and physical vigor for which the Scots are eminent, Mr. Child found a congenial home. Mrs. Martha Rice Child d. in Henniker, Aug. 20, 1804, aged 56 years. Mr. Solomon Child m. 2d, Mrs. Sarah Goodell Ward of Henniker, widow of Capt. Josiah Ward of that town, and dau. of Nathan and Persis Whitney Goodell of Marlborough, Mass. Mr. S. Child d. Feb. 1826, aged 84 years, leaving quite a family to honor his memory and emulate his virtues.

Mr. Child resided in Henniker during his early manhood, and until after his second marriage, when he removed to Livonia, Livingston, Co., New York. Mrs. Sally Joslyn Child had two children, but one survived her, her death occurring on the 29th April, 1798. Dea. Child was a man of sound judgment and earnest piety; he died in Indiana, whither he had removed with his son, Rev. Ward Child.

4897. viii. Asa B. Child, b. Mech. 8, 1815, of whom the brother, William H. Child, writes: "This youngest son of my father's family died at Oberlin College, Ohio, aged about twenty two years, while preparing to be a missionary of the foreign field, to which service he had consecrated himself. He lived a beautiful christian life, and died a most triumphant death."

4891. ii. James Child, eldest son and second child of Dea. Aaron and Sally Joslyn Child, b. in Henniker, N. H., about 1795, m. 1825, Hannah Hildreth, dau. of Abijah and Hannah Hildreth. Mr. James Child d. April 27, 1858. Mr. James Child was an ingenious and skillful mechanic, the inventor and patentee of one of the first if not the first cooking-stove ever manufactured in the State of New Hampshire. The date of his receiving the patent-right was about 1832. His only surviving son writes: “Among my earliest recollections is learning to read my father’s name upon our kitchen stove.” An inheritance of the genuine spirit of loyalty cannot be unexpected in these children, nor can we marvel that one of them should be willing to lay down his life for his country. Mrs. Hannah Hildreth Child was the daughter of a revolutionary soldier, who was wounded in the battle of Bunker’s Hill, and preserved from capture by the British, through the fidelity of a brave comrade, who lifted him upon his back and bore him from the field, when the Americans retreated. The oft repeated stories of the adventures of those trying days, were the solace of many a winters’ night to the eager children.

4903. vi. JASON CHILD, b. Nov. 7, 1839, m. Feb. 25, 1864, Hattie A. Fitz of Chester, New Hampshire. Mr. Child entered the United States service in the recent war, was captured by the opposing forces in June, 1864, while with the army under General Wilson, in a raid upon the Welden Railway, and died from exposure in a southern prison. He was corporal of Co. K., 1st New Hampshire Cavalry. With others he was removed from Andersonville to Florence, South Carolina, to be exchanged, too late to save his ebbing life. He died in Florence, South Carolina, on the 3d of December, 1864, three days after reaching there.

4892. iii. REV. WARD CHILD, eldest son of Dea. Aaron and his second wife, Lucy Ward Child, b. in Henniker, N. H., Oct. 31, 1800, m. in 1823, Martha Stevenson of Canandaigua, Ontario Co., New York, who was b. April 10, 1801. Rev. Mr. Ward Child d. Dec. 1855, at Chagrin Falls, Ohio. Mrs. Martha S. Child d. Dec. 1875, in Selma, Ohio. Mr. Child’s life was one of many changes. His ministry an earnest and laborious one. His temperament such that he was sensitive to those trials peculiar to the ministerial life. His first settlement was at Onondaga Hill, New York; he removed speedily to the State of Ohio, and had settlements in one or two places in the “Western Reserve.” His health after some years requiring release from the sedentary habit of his profession, Mr. Child settled upon a farm in Strykersville, Wyoming Co., New York, but he did not entirely relinquish preaching. Returning to the Western Reserve he there closed his most active and useful life.

4895. vi. William H. Childs, second son of Dea. Aaron and Lucy Ward Child, b. in Livonia, Livingston Co., N. Y., April 1, 1807, m. 1st, April 15, 1828, Miss Laura Amsden of Phelps, Ontario Co., N. Y.; m. 2d, Sept. 13, 1865, Mrs. Elizabeth Blake. Mr. Wm. H. Childs has been for nearly half a century an active business man. The first ten years he was a merchant, and since that period engaged as a General Insurance Agent. Genial, hospitable, of large and warm heart, he is an honorable representative of his race, of which he is justly proud. Some few years since he gathered beneath his own roof a most goodly assemblage of kindred, from eight different states—one coming to the meeting of that portion of the tribe from sunny Florida; and it was asked on the occasion, "if they knew one of the Childs family who would be a discredit to the name?" The universal response was, No! Mr. Childs attested his patriotism in giving up one of his noble sons on the altar of freedom, and finds "no cause to blush as he looks upon his other children and grandchildren." He writes, "We are proud of every one of them; there is not a black or speckled one in the whole flock, in fact I believe there is Royal blood in the Childs family." We hope the future chronicler may be able to report as honorable a character in the possession of the descendants of these cherished grandchildren. Mrs. Laura Amsden Childs d. at Niagara Falls, N. Y., May 3, 1865.

Mr. Heaton has long been identified with the Irving's Savings Bank, at 96 Warren St., New York City, and is a man of trusted integrity, giving the interest of the banking house ever the pre-eminence, indeed subordinating all personal ambitions to its advancement in the most honorable manner. His conscientious service is honorably esteemed by the officers of the Institution.
4968. V. REV. AUSTIN CARPENTER HEATON, D. D., third son and fifth child of Martha Child and William Heaton, b. in Thetford, Orange Co., Vt., May 28, 1815, m. Nov. 2, 1861, Ariana Frazier Jones. Mr. Heaton commenced his studies preparatory to his profession, at the Academy in his native town, making further preparation for college in like schools in New Hampshire, and graduated from Dartmouth College, in Hanover, Grafton Co., N. H., in 1840. Almost immediately he removed to Virginia, and for some nine years was an unusually successful teacher of a classical and mathematical school in Alexandria. While resident in Alexandria, received the degree of A. M. from his Alma Mater. In the year 1849 we find him pursuing his theological studies at the Theological Seminary of Princeton, New Jersey. His licensure was granted him by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, N. J., in the spring of 1850. For four years following he was settled over a Presbyterian church at Harpers Ferry, Virginia, thence called to the third Presbyterian church of Baltimore, Maryland. His stay was brief in Baltimore. In 1855, Dr. Heaton accepted a call to the church of his denomination in Princess Anne, Somerset Co., Maryland, where he has since remained. Some six years after his settlement at Princess Anne, his marriage to Miss A. F. Jones occurred. "Mrs. Heaton was a lady of most exalted character, and finished culture, and of a most respectable and ancient family." Her death, which was on the first of January, 1878, was an irreparable loss to her family. The degree of D. D. was conferred upon Rev. Mr. Heaton by the University of Delaware, in 1877.

Esq., of Carrolton, by the Rev. Hugh Barr. In October, 1852, Mr. and Mrs. Heaton removed from Carrolton to Virden, Macoupin Co., Ill., where he resided until the time of his death, which was upon Sunday, the 26th of May, 1868. Mr. C. P. Heaton was one of the partners in the banking house of Dubois, Heaton & Chesnut; a citizen full of effective interest and activity in all affairs of the municipality. At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the town of Virden, on the day following Mr. Heaton's decease, sincere expressions of regret were made by leading members, and resolutions passed commendatory of his noble life and true citizenship, and of heartfelt condolence with his family in their great bereavement.

Mr. Billings was largely engaged in mercantile pursuits, and was personally interested in many of the public improvements of central Illinois, accumulating a very considerable wealth. His death occurred on the 22d of February, 1873, at Jacksonville, Ill., where he had been a resident two years. The property which Mr. Billings supposed would shield his small family from all care, with the ignis fatuus character it often manifests, took to itself wings and fled away. Very fortunately Mrs. Billings possessed a wealth of cultured intellect which enabled her to meet these adverse circumstances. The ill health of her only surviving child, led her after a few years, to the Pacific coast, where mother and daughter are instructors. Mrs. Billings is in the "State Institution for the Deaf, Dumb} and Blind," at Berkely near Oakland, California. Miss Ellen E. Billings, has charge of the department of instrumental music in the Napa Ladies' Seminary, at Napa City, California.

i. Hon. Aaron Childs, eldest son and child of Dea. Josiah and Abigail Ward Childs, b. in Henniker, N. H., Dec. 1, 1806. m. April 11, 1833, Hannah F. Bemis, dau. of Jonathan Bemis of Windham, Vt. All the children of Dea. Josiah and Mrs. Abigail Ward Child, were born in his own native place in the Granite State, but as Daniel Webster said of it, "New Hampshire was an excellent State to emigrate from," so it appeared to this large household of sons. The eldest set the example. The year after his marriage Mr. Childs with his bride removed to the then wilds of Michigan, he purchased a tract of land in Washtenaw Co. and established a home. His daughter writes, "For many years he experienced the manifold trials incident to pioneer life, at that period. From the organization of the township in which he resides, he has been connected with it in official capacities. For fifteen years he was its Supervisor. In 1870 he was elected a member of the State Legislature." Though privation of luxuries may have been the unavoidable lot of these early settlers of the Peninsula State, long since ease and plenty have crowned their toils, and none are held in more thorough esteem than the Hon. Aaron Childs and his numerous family.

[Fifth Generation.]

The record of Moses Child is derived from two sources. One account furnished by Mr. Isaac Child of Boston, whose manuscripts are gathered mostly from Boston records, gives his birth as the son of Isaac Child of Waltham, Mass., in 1731, and m. to Sarah Styles of Waltham. The other account furnished by a descendant of Moses Child, gives him as the son of an English emigrant, who landed in Casco Bay, Maine, in 1730, and that he was born on ship-board in the bay. We have not been able to verify fully these records. He may have been born in a vessel and in Casco Bay, even if it had not sailed from England. His parents may have been among the emigrants from Massachusetts who were seeking new settlements in Maine, as we know many of the family name went and settled in Maine from the earlier settled portions of Massachusetts. Both agree substantially as to date of birth, and to details of his subsequent history. The fact that these descendants cannot give any names of the emigrating parents, and no such are found, or any of their records, renders it more probable that he is the son of Isaac and Anna Adams Child of Waltham, Mass., who might have been on their way to Maine to settle, or visit those resident there, at the time of his birth; rendered the more probable, that communication with Maine was then by water more than by land. He was a prominent citizen of his day. He was commissioned a lieutenant in the old French War, by Gov. Shirley, and bore the same rank in our Revolutionary struggle. He was at the capture of Gen. Burgoyne, previous to which he received a commission from Gen. Washington to repair to East Maine and Nova Scotia to inquire into the condition of those colonies. The following is a copy of the commission:

"By his Excellency, Geo. Washington, Esq., Commander in-Chief of the United Colonies,

To Moses Child, Esq:

"The Honorable, the Continental Congress, having lately passed a Resolve, contained in the following words, to wit: That two persons be sent at the expense of these Colonies, to Nova Scotia, to inquire into the state of that Colony, the disposition of the inhabitants towards the American cause, and the condition of the fortifications, dock yards, the quantity of the war-like stores, and the number of soldiers, sailors and ships of war there; and to transmit the earliest intelligence to Gen. Washington.

"I do thereby constitute and appoint you, the said Moses Child, to be one of the persons to undertake this business. And as the season is late, and this a work of great importance, I entreat and request that you will use the utmost dispatch, attention, and fidelity in the execution of it. The necessity of acting with a proper degree of caution and secrecy is too apparent to need recommendation. You will keep an accurate account of your expenses, and upon your return you will be rewarded in a suitable manner for the fatigue of your journey and the services you render your country, by conducting and discharging this business with expedition and fidelity. Given under my hand this 24th day of Nov. 1775.

"George Washington."

[Sixth Generation.]

5113. iii. JAMES CHILD, third child and second son of Moses and Sarah Styles Child, b. in Grafton, Mass., April 4, 1762. He resided in Grafton, Mass., in Hallowell, Maine, and in Augusta, Maine. He m. in 1781, Hannah Cushing, dau. of Adam and Sarah Reed Cushing of Abbington, Mass. She was b. April 10, 1762, and d. at Augusta, Maine, Nov. 20, 1842. Mr. Child emigrated to Hallowell when the country was almost a wilderness, bringing with him as his only patrimony, a good name, a sound and robust constitution, high principles of honor and integrity. He was accompanied by a brother-in law with whom he engaged in the mercantile business. Their first stock of goods was purchased on credit of a Boston firm. Connecting the fur trade with the Indians with their other business, they were quite successful in the results of their first purchase, realizing an amount of profits nearly sufficient to pay the bills they had contracted. Mr. Child went to Boston, paid his bills and obtained from the same house a new supply of goods. In returning to his place of business the vessel bearing himself and goods was wrecked on the coast, his goods were a total loss, and his own life was scarcely saved. On reaching his home he found other misfortunes had befallen him, which left him penniless, caused by the absconding of his partner. With the burden of debt incurred in the last purchase resting upon his shoulders, together with the entire lack of family supplies for the winter which was just upon him, and no resources but his own energies, he addressed a note to his Boston creditors giving a full statement of the case, asking for their forbearance, and promising full payment for his purchases as fast as his earnings in some business would allow. His creditors gave him their sympathies and their assurances that they would not trouble him. This nerved him afresh for new enterprise. He established a tannery as promising remunerative returns for his labors. His lack of practical knowledge was supplied by the kindness of a clerical friend, Rev. Jason Livermore, who had been reared a practical tanner. This enterprise proved a success; he retrieved his lost fortune, and liquidated his entire indebtedness. This turning point in his financial affairs was the beginning of prosperity, which followed him through after life. In later years his home seems to have been in Augusta, Me. He was among the organizers of the first Congregational church of that town, and contributed largely to the erection of a house of worship, at whose altars he worshiped till his death. He was one of the organizers of the first bank in Augusta, Me., and for years a director. Public confidence gave him various offices of trust—such as inspector, justice of the peace, and for thirteen years town treasurer. Of a cheerful temperament, he was facetious, full of amusing and instructive anecdote, modest of his own abilities, social and benevolent. In practical life he possessed inflexible honesty and uprightness. His christian character was consistent, exemplary and cheerful.

5123. iii. JAMES LORING Child, third child of James and Hannah Cushing Child, b. in Augusta, Me., May 31, 1792, m. Nov. 10, 1822, Jane Hale of Portland, Maine.
Mr. James L. Child, after the usual common school training, entered the Hallowell Academy, designing to fit for college. A casualty seriously injuring his knee disabled him for months and changed his plans. Upon his recovery he entered at once upon the study of the law, which he was obliged to make a long term of five years. With a taste for belles letters, he was a writer of some most pleasing prose and verse. He also made a practical study of surveying. His first legal partnership was with Hon. Thomas Rice of Winslow, Me.: the election of Mr. Rice as representative in Congress, caused an early dissolution of this firm; but Mr. Child retained the lucrative business of the office. At this period, 1812, the war with Great Britian awakened much military enthusiasm. In January, 1814, Gov. Strong of Massachusetts, appointed Mr. Child captain of the Augusta militia; and justice of the peace for Kennebec. Ill health soon rendered change of scene and rest imperative, and Mr. Child travelled both in the United States and abroad. An acquaintance formed in England led Mr. Child to form a commercial partnership in Charleston, S. C.; the failure in Liverpool of Mr. Witherspoon, a brother of Mr. Child’s partner, abruptly terminated the business. Mr. Child returned to Augusta, Me., and resumed his professional duties, and was not long after an active participator in the ceremonies and labors attending the separation of Maine from Massachusetts, and the formation of a distinct state government; this was in 1820. Mr. Child had won so fine a reputation for business dispatch, that he was at once chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives of the new State, a post he held for eleven years. Later he was made a Councillor of the United States District Court of Maine. He was elected a member of the State Legislature, but declined to serve. In all municipal interests he was an active and able organizer and director. He was one of the directors of the Augusta bank, and in uniform attendance till the day before his death, which occurred in 1862. His life was marked by great energy, versatility of talent and executive ability.

Mr. and Mrs. David L. Child merit at our hands an especial notice, for by their philanthropic and literary labors they have attained deserved notability. Mr. Child was educated for the legal profession, but was more devoted to journalism and other literary work than to the practice of the law. "For several years Mr. Child was the editor of the Massachusetts Journal, published in Boston. In 1841, Mr. Child and his gifted wife removed to New York City, and became joint-editors of the newspaper called the Anti-Slavery Standard. He published a large pamphlet on the taking of Texas from Mexico, called Naboth's Vineyard, also a small volume on the manufacture of biscuit sugar; pamphlets and articles for various papers and magazines mostly on political topics of the day."*

Mrs. Child has for some years resided in Wayland, Mass., in one of the cozy homes surrounded by noble elms, so frequent in New England. Mrs. Lydia M. Child was the daughter of Mr.
David Francis of Medford, Mass. Mr. Francis was somewhat widely known in New England as the manufacturer of a sort of biscuit called the Medford cracker; he was a man of good mind, and, with his wife's efficient aid, gave to his children the best advantages for education, with an inheritance of good intellectual powers. Their earliest American ancestor of the name, settled in Medford in 1636. Rev. Convers Francis, D. D., of Harvard University, a clergyman of the Unitarian church, is an elder brother of Mrs. Child, and was largely instrumental in the development of her "early love of literature." In the home of Dr. Francis, Mrs. Child wrote her first romance, "Hobomok," suggested to her by the perusal of Dr. Palfrey's article on Yamoj'dan in the North American Review. The succeeding year was issued "The Rebels: A Tale of the Revolution." In this work are found two gems,—a speech which she makes James Otis utter, is so full of patriotism and strength as to have been often declaimed as Otis' own words; and a sermon of Whitefield which many presumed the genuine work of the great divine. In 1826, Mrs. Child edited a monthly magazine, the Juvenile Miscellany, which she sustained eight years.
She also wrote a cook book, "The Frugal Housewife," "The Girl's Own Book," "The Mother's Assistant." These were followed by a "History of the Condition of Women in all Ages," "Philothea, a Greek Romance," of the time of Pericles. During the residence of Mrs. Child in New York, she became the close friend of Isaac T. Hopper, so widely known as the friend of the slave, and after his death Mrs. Child wrote the very fascinating story of his life. We cannot mention all her writings, but "collectively they number over a hundred." We close our brief notice of this most noble and thoroughly practical, true, loveable woman in the words of the North American Review:

"We are not sure that any woman in our country would outrank Mrs.
Child. This lady has long been before the public as an author with much success, and she well deserves it, for in all her works we think that nothing can be found which does not commend itself by its tone of healthy morality and good sense. Few female writers, if any, have done more or better things for our literature in its lighter or graver depths.”

On the 20th of October, 1880, Mrs. Lydia Maria Child died at her home in Wayland. Funeral services were conducted in a most quiet, unostentatious manner as she had wished. Rev. Mr. Salter of Roxbury officiated, taking for his text portions of Mrs. Child’s latest book, “Aspirations of the World.” Hon. Wendell Phillips pronounced a chaste and just eulogy.

By will Mrs. Child left $50,000 to the Hampton Agricultural College of Virginia, and $9,000 to several charitable institutions.

Dec. 23, 1809, dau. of James Scott and Mary Sanford Dwight of Springfield, Mass. Mr. Childe added the terminal “e” to his name, which is really the only correct addition to be made. He was a graduate of West Point. He was 1st Lieut. and Capt. in the U. S. army, and a superior civil engineer. He constructed “The Western Railroad,” (from Pittsfield to Albany) the “Connecticut River Railroad,” and also “The Cleaveland & Columbus Railroad,” and “The Mobile & Ohio Railroad,” the last (three hundred miles long) being his great work as an engineer. He was a man of high toned character, well educated, very energetic, and generous in the use of his means. Mrs. Laura D. Childe was lost in the “Arctic,” Sept. 27, 1854, with her daughter, Lelia Maria Childe, on her return voyage from a tour of pleasure through Europe. He m. 5319. iii. Of Jonathan Hagar, third son and child of Benjamin and Sarah Martin Hagar, and grandson of Esther Child Hagar, we have only outlines. We know that he was b. Feb. 19, 1807, was m. and had two children, and that his death occurred on Nov. 16, 1879, in Plainfield, Ill.: but this extract from an obituary notice is appended, because it is said to express the general characteristics of the Hagar family. "By good business management, excellent investments, economy and industry, Mr. Hagar succeeded in amassing considerable wealth, a portion of which he judiciously invested in real estate. He was a member of the Congregational church at Plainfield, an earnest, energetic christian who believed that a religion worth having, was worth praying and working for, and his liberal donations to the church, and all other worthy objects, as well as his zeal in the cause of temperance, attested the sincerity of his belief, and the purity of his religious character." One of the family, Miss K. A. Hagar, while doubting the claim made for them, that they were "men of mark," says, "they are usually very honest, often very pious, refined, cultivated, kind-hearted men."

5304. viii. Eunice Child, sixth dau. and eighth child of Ensign Samuel and Esther Child, b. in Weston, Mass., Nov. 6, 1760, m. Dec. 15, 1784, Daniel Twitchell of Newton, Mass. Mr. Daniel Twitchell was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, beginning in the battle of Lexington. He nearly lost his life in recapturing a cannon taken by the enemy. Mr. and Mrs. Twitchell formed a part of the band, composed of her parents, grand parents, brothers and sisters with their families, who removed to Vt., and settled in Addison county. Mr. Twitchell was severely injured by the fall of a heavy limb from a tree, upon his head; after months and years of great suffering he died, in 1800, leaving his widow with seven children to train up aright, and a farm upon which was a large indebtedness. Mrs. E. C. Twitchell was a woman of great energy of body and mind, and equal to the great burden cast upon her. Her farm she cleared from debt, her children were brought up to become self-reliant, upright, honorable, successful members of society. In early life Mrs. Twitchell united with the Methodist church, but subsequently joined the Society of Friends, of which body she was an efficient, faithful member, being endowed with rare gifts of speech. Unusual physical strength was hers throughout her life, enabling her when fully fourscore to attend to her dairy, milking her cows, and making butter without aid; indeed from choice she lived alone in the later years of her life, communing with high and holy thoughts. She died in 1844 aged 84 years. For this sketch of one of the noblest, truest Christian women of the Child family we are largely indebted to her grand-daughter Mrs. Weltha P. T. Griswold of Greenfield, Ill.

[Sixth Generation.]
5365. iv. Timothy W. Twitchell, third son and fourth child of Eunice Child and Daniel Twitchell, b. in Weston, Mass., 1791, m. in 1813, Pamela Marsh.

Mr. Twitchell purchased a comfortable house near his mother’s home, here his children were born and here he dwelt for many years. He was an extensive contractor for the erection of factories and other large buildings and covered bridges. He was a man of great energy, excellent habits and noble character, one who was always held in the highest esteem by the large circle of his acquaintance. For twenty-two years he held the office of justice of the peace; was also often in other posts of honor as the choice of his townsmen. A fall, resulting in a fractured hip, compelled a temporary rest, and gave him time to think of visiting some of his elder children who had removed to the West. Not daunted by his lameness, or his wife’s precarious health, he took her with him to Illinois and was so charmed with the country he remained, and wrote to his children in Vermont to sell the home and come to him.
For a few weeks he was rejoicing in the reunion of his eight children in their new home; suddenly the Asiatic cholera came and swept away “the choice ones of the flock,” a son, (the youngest) a fine young man of twenty years, and a most promising daughter of seventeen. A few weeks later another son, twenty-three years old, died of quick consumption; this was followed not long after by the death of his wife. Chastened, but sustained in his sorrows by his christian hope, Mr. Twitchell lived on, like his mother, in earnest work, and patient waiting until nearly fourscore and two years of age. The last months of his life, intense suffering from the injury of years previous, shadowed his days, but no murmur was permitted to escape his lips. He died Nov. 1872.

Early life was passed in the pioneer times of the Green Mountain State, incurred thus to meeting deprivations and overcoming obstacles, there seemed to him no need to fear the trials incident to western migrations. In 1831, Mr. and Mrs. Twitchell with their children moved to Michigan, and resided there some years. His son, Dr. R. W. Twitchell, having established himself in Minnesota, desired his father to be with him, and again Mr. Twitchell made removal to a new country, but with all cheer. An exceedingly industrious and upright man, he would never seek wealth but through open, legitimate methods. His life closed in a quiet sleep on the 27th of September, 1877, in Chatfield, Minn. Mrs. Twitchell was a native of Long Island, her parents belonged to the Society of Friends; she died on the 19th of November, 1847. Mr. Jonas Twitchell died at the home of his son, R. W. Twitchell, M. D., in Chatfield, Minn., in his 82d year. A fitting memorial notice was contributed to the county paper by one who knew him well, summing up the characteristics of the man and the varied experiences of his life, commending the industry which was untiringly manifested and the integrity always maintained. Closing with an account of the end, which we think can be most fittingly described in the words of the Psalmist, "So He giveth His beloved sleep."

May 23, 1852, Martha J. Carpenter of Baldwinsville, N. Y. When eight years old Dr. Twitchell left Vermont with his father and went to Michigan, where he spent his boyhood and early manhood. In 1854 with his wife and one child, Dr. Twitchell removed to Chatfield, Minnesota: his second child was the first child born in that town. During the late war, Dr. Twitchell served as surgeon through the four years, the first two years connected with a Minnesota reg’t and the last two in the Volunteer Dept’ of the U. S. A. At the close of the war Dr. Twitchell returned to Minnesota, and has ever since devoted himself to his profession with great assiduity and success.

[Sixth Generation.]
5465. i. Alexander Child, eldest son and child of Samuel, Jr., and Abigail Sheppard Child, b. in Weston, Middlesex Co., Mass., Feb. 22, 1785, m. in Highgate, Vt., in 1813, Betsey Haskins. Mr. Alexander Child died in Manasha, Wisconsin, Aug. 4, 1863. Mrs. Betsey Haskins Child died in the same place Nov. 1st, 1866. Mrs. Child was descended from the Litchfields of Connecticut, a family of prominence and worth, and most patriotic. Her father, "Seth Haskins, enlisted and served as an artificer in the war of 1812." Gifted with a poetic imagination, Mr. Haskins wrote some pieces of considerable merit. Mrs. Child inherited the gift of song. The wandering mania which impels many to encounter the hardships and overcome obstacles incident to a pioneer life, seemed to have taken a strong hold upon Mr. Child, leading him into eastern New York. Several removes within that State resulted in a settlement in Barre, Orleans Co., where he made his home for some twenty years, engaged in agricultural pursuits—this was at the time the Erie canal was being made, and its construction brought farm products into a wider market. Not however satisfied with the slow accumulations of this small town. Mr. Child concluded to make another move, and went with his large family to Joliet, Ill. A very fatal epidemic prevailing in that vicinity determined him to pitch his tent elsewhere, and in Milwaukee, Wis., he once more sought a home. Here a number of his children were engaged in brick making, others taught. The nomadic life had interfered with the education of the family, somewhat, but all appreciated the advantages of higher culture and have sought to secure it for their children. In the year 1848 or '49, the entire family emigrated to the Fox River Valley in Wisconsin, and are there permanently located. Mr. Alexander Child was not a religious man, but a man of integrity and uprightness. Mrs. Child was a very earnest Christian, and her sincere piety has proved a rich dower to her large family of children.

Mr. and Mrs. Rider moved to western New York at that period sparsely settled, and more remote from the luxuries of life than are many of our territories to-day. The daughter, Mrs. D. L. Taylor, writing us, says:

“Our mother was a woman of great worth; through all the hardships and vicissitudes incident to a pioneer life, she ever maintained a high and noble character. As a mother, she was affectionate and true, and no children could hold in higher esteem a mother than do hers, their mother. She ever retained her love for her native State, and dwelt much on the delights of her Green Mountain home.”

5469. v. Hon. John Child, second son of Samuel and Hannah Lamson Child, b. in Weybridge, Vt., Dec. 8, 1796, m. 1st. Nov. 1, 1826. Abigail, only dau. of Daniel and Bathsheba Frost Wright of New Haven, Vt.; m. 2nd, Feb. 18, 1844, Mrs. Mahala Briggs Pratt, widow of Elisha R. Pratt of Weybridge, and dau. of Apollos and Stella Briggs of Rochester, Vt. "Mr. John Child received his education at the common school, supplemented by instruction by his father, who at that time was reputed to be the best educated man in that town. When thirty years of age he married his first wife, who was but seventeen years old; the young wife was naturally ambitious, and developed strength of character, with great executive ability and an amiable disposition, which rendered her truly a help-meet. The children of this union were three sons and five daughters, four of whom died in girlhood; one daughter and the sons are still living. During the first fourteen years of his married life Mr. Child resided in Panton, Vt.; May 7, 1840, he removed to Weybridge, where he remained until his death. On July 26, 1843, the wife and mother was taken from her family by death, leaving her husband and eight children to mourn her loss. This great void was filled the following year by Mr. Child's second marriage to Mrs. Pratt, a woman of fine presence, and large benevolence. She combined the rare traits of character which fitted her to fill the difficult and responsible position of step mother, to a large family in such a way as to make her respected and beloved by the whole circle. The children of this marriage were three sons, two of whom died in boyhood. Soon after his first marriage John Child united with the Methodist Episcopal church of which he was an active member till his death. He gave generously to support the gospel and for benevolent objects, contributing largely for the erection of the present M. E. church edifice in Weybridge. As a business man he was successful in accumulating a large property, which was never lessened or wasted by speculation or mismanagement. He was by occupation a gentleman-farmer, and during his later years indulged much in piscatorial sports of which he was always passionately fond. In politics he was an ardent Republican, a firm believer in sound currency, a protective tariff, and honest men for official stations; he filled at times most of the various town offices, and was a member of the Vermont assembly in 1852-3. At the age of 75 he was stricken with pneumonia and died Mech. 27, 1872, beloved and respected by all for his sterling traits of character, not least among them his compassion for and generosity in assisting the poor. His widow, four sons and one daughter survive him."*

5577. ii. HON. JOHN A. CHILD, eldest son of Hon. John and Abigail Wright Child, b. in Panton, Vt., June 20, 1829, m. Mch. 10, 1852, Sarah Louisa Drake, eldest dau. of Dea. Elijah G. and Harriet Brewster Drake, b. in Weybridge, Vt., May 10, 1830. Mrs. Sarah L. D. Child received an academic education at Royalton, Vt., the residence of an uncle, Rev. Cyrus B. Drake, for forty years pastor of the Congregational church of that place; at the age of sixteen she became a teacher, in which occupation she continued until her marriage. The cause of education being of deep interest with her, the somewhat unusual compliment, in Vermont, of appointing ladies to office was tendered her, in repeated elections to the position of school superintendent. Energetic and active in matters of moral reformation, the temperance cause finds in her an untiring and efficient supporter. Early in life she united with the Congregational church of Weybridge, and continues prominent among its members, and as a teacher in the Sabbath school. Mr. J. A. Child received an academic education at Vergennes, Vt. In the autumn of 1853, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Child located in Weybridge, where they now reside. Mr. Child is by occupation a farmer and breeder of fine horses, and merino sheep, the last named being with him a specialty. His religious sympathies are with the Congregational denomination, with which church he united soon after marriage. In politics he is Republican to the core, and for the past twenty years has labored earnestly for the maintenance of the principles of that party. Prominent among the offices bestowed upon him is that of town clerk, to which he was elected in 1867, and has held continuously to the present time, 1880."

[Eighth Generation.] Children, born in Weybridge, Vt.:

5587. i. WILLIS BRYANT CHILD, b. Jan. 12, 1854, m. Nov. 12, 1877 Flora Effie Mott, eldest dau. of Rev. John S. and Maria Gregg Mott, of the M. E. Troy Conference. She was b. Nov. 17, 1854, in Cambridge, Vt.; received an academic education, music being made a specialty. A lady of rare executive ability, high moral principle, engaging manners and amiable disposition; she carries sunshine to the hearts of all her friends. Mr. Willis B. Child received a thorough academic training. His minority, except a year spent in travel in the west, was spent with his parents, and with them he continues to reside since his marriage. By occupation, a farmer, devoting special attention to the breeding of fine horses. A true son of the Green Mountain State, in politics he is soundly Republican.

5588. ii. Infant daughter, d. young.

5589. iii. Harriet Emily Child, b Sept. 23, 1857, m. Oct. 1, 1879, Charles Somner Cryssler, a rising young lawyer of Independence, Mo. Mrs. H. E. Child Cryssler was educated at the Stanstead, P. Q., Female College, devoting much time to drawing and painting, for which she evinced decided talent. Portrait painting and crayoning were her special favorites, and to better perfect herself in these branches she spent a year at the St. Louis School of Design. Endowed with rare gifts and winning manners, and possessing the sterling qualities of mind and heart that command respect, she is a favorite with all who know her.

Brevoort Wright. She was b. May, 1855. Most thoroughly educated, she is a lady of refinement and culture, and much esteemed by a large circle of friends. Mr. George Edward Child was educated at the Fort Edward Institute, N. Y.; his minority, when not at school, was spent in the paternal home. He resides at the "Child Homestead" in Weybridge; is by occupation a farmer and dealer in merino sheep, and has also an extensive sheep ranch in Huerfano Co., Colorado. His religious sympathies are with the Methodist Episcopal church, to which he is a liberal contributor. Like his father, he is a staunch Republican.

In 1826, Mr. Ebenezer Child moved from Vermont to DeKalb, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., making the removal with a pair of oxen to draw his large covered wagon in which were closely stowed his wife and two small children, with most of their household effects. He moved slowly over the rough roads driving two cows. The following year Mr. Child returned to Vermont for a few things left behind them, and for a sum of one hundred dollars which his brother John paid him for his "birth-right." With about two hundred dollars of money he started on his farm, then all woods. By industry and economy he has come into the enjoyment of a farm of some three hundred acres, well stocked, and money at interest, and in his latter days can rest without anxiety. The patient toil and strong courage required at the time Mr. Child and his young wife entered the woods of St. Lawrence Co., fifty-four years since, can scarce be understood by those who yearly visit it now (1880) for pleasure and escape from the weary round of toil in our large cities, at that period many of them only small villages.

5648. i. Polly Child, eldest child of Ephraim and Kath-erine Whitney Childs, b. in Sturbridge, Mass., Aug. 9, 1795, m.
1819, Lawson Graves. Eleven children were given them, three died in infancy; and as we have no dates of birth may not have given them in due chronological order.

[Eighth Generation.] Children:

5656. i. Eli Whitney Graves, went to California and died on his return, in New York City, aged 25 years.

5657. ii. William B. Graves, m. Jane Frost of Hubbardston, Mass.; had three children, one died in infancy; a son and daughter living. Mother died 1875.

5658. iii. Simon W. Graves, removed to the State of New York.

5660. v. Catherine Graves, m. William Frost; four children, two daughters died 1877. Mother died 1875.

5661. vi. Maria Graves, m. Elon G. Higgins.

5662. vii. Albert P. Graves, m. 1st, Elvira Bonney; m. 2d, Matilda Randolph. Mr. Graves prepared for the ministry and was settled over the Greenwood Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. After some years labor in the pastorate, Mr. Graves felt it his duty to enter upon the work of an Evangelist; and in this way has labored in many States with eminent success. Upon the death of his first wife, leaving two young sons, he devotedly watched over and educated them.

Mrs. Whiting, now in her 83d year, has kindly furnished us much of her line. She is the last of her generation in the household of her father. Delicate from childhood, she has long survived the more rugged, and still performs the domestic duties of her household. Through her long life she has tenderly watched over the sick and dying, lovingly ministering to their physical and spiritual necessities. With her beloved husband she awaits the "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Reside in West Medway, Norfolk county, Mass.

CHAPTER IX.

JOHN CHILD OF BOSTON.

The evidence is so strong which points to the John Child of Woodstock, Ct., who married Elizabeth ——, as the son John of Benjamin Child the emigrant, that it has been accepted and so recorded. We are, therefore, compelled to search the early records and find, if we can, some progenitor for the family in Boston and vicinity who have been supposed hitherto in this Benjamin line. We find no less than three of the name of John Child on the early records, from any one of whom this line may have come. One is a John Child, a brother of Dr. Robert Child, who distinguished himself in Boston, as elsewhere recorded. These brothers are supposed to be of the family of Sir Joshua and Sir John Child of London and India. Another John Child gave testimony at the age of twenty-five, in 1653. And a third was a somewhat noted tailor of the times, a man of property, some of whose descendants removed to Maine. There has been a supposition that John Child who married Elizabeth —— may have married for his second wife Sarah Blake, thus making him identical with John Child of Boston; but this could not be, for John Child of Boston was married to Sarah Blake in 1710, while the youngest child of John and Elizabeth was born in 1712. There is another hypothesis quite reasonable and not impossible, that John Child of Boston may have been a descendant of Joseph Child who was born 1674, the youngest son of Benjamin the emigrant, of whose life we have no record. We strongly incline to the latter theory from the frequent repetition of the name Joseph among the descendants, the like custom noticeable in other lines. We cannot establish the direct line at present, but time may reveal the missing link. We therefore record the following name as in the second generation.

[Second Generation.]

5692. i. JOHN CHILD, b. in Boston, Mass., Aug. 1, 1671, m. by Rev. Benjamin Wadsworth, Feb. 10, 1710, Sarah Blake.

[Third Generation. Children:

5693. i. JOHN CHILD, JR., b. in Boston, Mass., Feb. 8, 1714, m. Dec. 23, 1736, Jane Lawrence.

From the Boston Transcript, of Nov. 7, 1867, we copy the following notice of Mr. Child on the occasion of his death:

"Mr. Geo. II. Child died yesterday p. m., after a lingering illness, at his residence in Dover street. He was a gentleman widely known and respected. His genial nature, generous disposition and rare varied information made him a universal favorite. In early manhood he was treasurer of the Old Tremont Theatre; afterward, for years, the chief clerk of Mr. Jonas Chickering, and Chickering & Sons. During the war he had charge of an important branch of the military department of the government (State). In all these positions he was found adequate to the most pressing exigency. Through his long and painful illness he was cheered by the warm sympathies and attention of hundreds of devoted friends."

5727. iii. Prof. Francis J. Child, Ph. D., third child and second son of Joseph, Jr., and Mary James Child, b. in Boston, Mass., Feb. 1, 1825, m. 1862, Elisabeth Ellery Sedgwick. She was b. in New York City Jan. 7, 1825.

Professor Child was graduated at Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., in 1846. He was tutor in mathematics for some time in the same institution. In 1848, Harvard College gave him the position of tutor in rhetoric and history. In 1851, he was advanced to a professorship in rhetoric and oratory. In 1876, he was still further promoted to the Chair of English Literature, a position which he still fills. In 1854, the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy was conferred upon him by the "University of Gottengen." In 1849, he visited Europe, where he spent two years in study and travels. He is especially distinguished for his thorough acquaintance with early English literature. As a Chaucer scholar, he has perhaps no superior in America or Europe. He is the author of the admirable article on "Ballad Poetry" in Johnson's Encyclopædia. Dr. Child is also the compiler of "English and Scottish Ballads," in 8 vols., Boston, 1860, which contains all but two or three of the ancient ballads, known to scholars, and is a most valuable and rare collection.

The death of Catherine Stimpson Child, which occurred in this district on Thursday evening, removes from our midst one whose gentle kindness and devoted life made her dearrow loved, and will cause her departure to be sincerely mourned. She was born in Charlestown in 1793, and her life was a busy and active one, in every duty of which she was faithful and sincere. Her purity of thought and action, her sweetness of disposition endeared her to all who knew her, and no one can forget the tenderness of her sympathy for all who needed it. Hers was a life well spent through all its length, and the reward of good service on this earth was certainly gained by her. She could trace directly her descent from George Bunker, from whom the noted battle site of the Revolution derives its name, John Stimpson having married a Rebecca Bunker, in 1709. She leaves one son, Francis Child, of this district.

[Sixth Generation.] Child:

[Sixth Generation.]
5756. i. FRANCIS CHILD, only child of Nathaniel and Catharine Simpson Child, b. in Boston, Mass., July 28, 1820, m. Feb. 2, 1840, Juliet Wilcox Dearing of Charlestown, Mass.; she was born Mech. 9, 1824. Residence, Charlestown, Mass. Mr. Child is recognized in the circle of his acquaintance as a man of intelligence and culture, possessing good business talent, a man of strict integrity, and engaged in successful mercantile business in the firm of Childs & Lane, dealers in carpets, Tremont street, Boston. In municipal and State affairs he has evinced a capacity for wisely counselling and securing the best results for the public benefit. In the years of 1859–60 and '61, he held the office of Inspector in the Massachusetts State Prison. In 1862 and '63, he was a member of the Board of Aldermen in Charlestown, Mass.: the same year he was trustee of the Charlestown Public Library; in 1863–64, he was a member of the Massachusetts State Senate, commissioner for the erection of the soldiers' monument of Charlestown, Mass.; for ten years trustee and vice-president of the Winchester home for aged women; a member of the Mystic Water Board eight years; a member of Gov. Rice's executive council for 1877–8; Master of the Henry Prince Lodge of Masons for 1869–70 and 71; District Deputy Grand Master of Massachusetts Grand Lodge for 1878–9 and '80: all these positions he could not hold were not his qualifications superior.

CHAPTER X.

SAMUEL CHILD AND DESCENDANTS.

This chapter introduces an emigrant, undoubtedly allied to the Roxbury families, but in what degree we have no record to determine. We rely upon the ancient public records for much information of this line, and they do not furnish as much detail as we could desire. A conflicting of opinions seems to exist between "Freeman" and "Savage," two authorities upon colonial matters, in regard to the Richard Child who heads the following large posterity: From "Freeman" we are led to believe him the son of Samuel Child, while "Savage" regards him as a brother of said Samuel. If Richard was born in America, as the record of the date of his birth would indicate, (stated to have been in 1624,) then we must conclude that "Freeman" is correct, and Samuel Child was the emigrant. If this is true, it also makes Samuel Child the first of the name who came to the colony of Massachusetts. In that case the Samuel Child slain by the Indians, March 26, 1675, would probably have been a brother of Richard, as the father would have been too aged, it would seem, to have undertaken to go into battle. Yet we have a statement from "Freeman" that Samuel Child was slain by the Indians at Rehoboth March 25, 1675: in the same battle was also slain a Samuel Linnet, brother of his son Richard's wife, Mary Linnett; while "Savage" in his Genealogical Collections, page 285, gives Richard Child as one of the early settlers of Barnstable, and brother of Samuel Child.

Richard Child's ancestry is, therefore, in somewhat the same obscurity as that of Benjamin Child of the Roxbury line of descendants, and that of the Watertown line. But the fact and date of this marriage we have. A large line of descendants are traced directly from his son Richard, who are found in western Massachusetts, on leaving Cape Cod, and thence spreading into Vermont and westward. Another line of descendants of Richard, the elder, it is supposed are found in Maine. As the first settlement of Plymouth colony was in 1620, if Richard Child was born in 1624, in New England, we know that his father must have been an emigrant of the Plymouth Colony; and "Freeman" states him to have been the Samuel Child who was slain by the Indians. As no other person competes for the paternity of Richard Child, we accept Samuel Child, therefore, as the head of this long Barnstable line.

[Second Generation.]

5818. i. Richard Child, the accepted son of Samuel Child, b. 1624, m. Oct. 15, 1649, Mary Linnett of Barnstable, Mass.

[We are able at present to give but one child of Richard and Mary Linnett Child, though probably they had others.]

[Third Generation.] Child:

5819. i. Richard Child, Jr., son of Richard and Mary Linnett Child, b. in Barnstable, Mass., Mch. 1653, m. about 1678, Elizabeth Crocker, dau. of John Crocker. She was b. Oct. 7, 1660, d. Jan. 15, 1716.

"Freeman" in his "History of Cape Cod" gives Richard a second wife, Hannah ——. Richard Child ranked among the prominent citizens of Barnstable, and was an honored deacon in the Congregational church of that place. He died Jan. 15, 1716.

5820. i. Samuel Child, b. Nov. 6, 1679, m. July 7, 1709, Hannah Barnard.

5822. iii. Thomas Child, b. Jan. 10, 1682, m. Mary ——.

5825. vi. Ebenezer Child, b. Mch. 1691, m. Hope ——.

5826. vii. Elizabeth Child, 2d, b. June 6, 1692.

5827. viii. James Child, b. Nov. 6, 1694, m. Sept. 27, 1722, Elizabeth Crocker.

[Fourth Generation.]

5820. i. Dea. Samuel Child, eldest child of Richard and Elizabeth Crocker Child, b. in Barnstable, Mass., Nov. 6, 1679, m. 1st, July 7, 1709, Hannah Barnard. She d. She was b. at New Haven, Ct. Jan. 27, 1825. Mr. Childs d. Dec. 12, 1867. Mr. Childs had a somewhat eventful life, but the incidents which make up a brief history, served to develop manly characteristics. His youth was spent in labor on his father’s farm, where habits of industry were formed and practical business knowledge acquired which served him in coming years. After a series of varied fortunes in several business enterprises, we find him, in the meridian of life, rendering military service to his country. In 1864 he entered the Union army and joined the 1st Massachusetts “Light Battery.” Soon after reaching the battle-field he was appointed inspector of “repairs,” a trust which he faithfully fulfilled, and his services recognized by his colonel, in the presentation of a valuable horse and equipments: also a sword. He was a favorite among his comrades on account of his kind and obliging disposition. Before the close of the war he was badly kicked by a horse from which injury he never fully recovered. He was with difficulty removed to his home, where the sympathy and tender care of his family and friends partially restored his health; at length he was attacked with typhoid fever which terminated his life. Mr. Childs was a man of warm and abiding friendships. He was esteemed and loved for his manly and generous qualities.

Mrs. Childs was left at the death of her husband with a family of young children dependent upon her exertions for support and education, a care which required courage, energy and enduring patience. She proved herself equal to the task. Her children have grown to maturity under a discipline and culture, through a christian mother’s guiding counsels and provident care, which qualify them for useful and responsible positions in life.

[Ninth Generation. ] Children:

6101. i. Francis Lee Childs, b. in Montague, Mass., July 3, 1831, m. Sept. 26, 1858, Olive W. Markham, dau. of Vine and Polly Markham of Albion, Calhoun county, Mich. Mr. and Mrs. Markham were among the first settlers in Albion and much esteemed for moral worth, and for their efficiency in laying the foundations of a prosperous society in the infancy of this town. Mrs. Markham, whose death occurred July 26, 1880, at the house of her daughter Mrs. F. L. Childs, in Rockford, Ill., at 80 years of age, was one of the charter members of the Presbyterian church of Albion, Mich., organized in 1836-7. She was an earnest, energetic lady, whose Christian zeal and self-sacrificing effort imparted life and growth to the church.

Mr. Childs was married in Iowa City, Iowa, by Rev. Peter S. Van Est. Mr. Childs graduated at the Normal school of Westfield, Mass., Feb. 27, 1855. With the characteristic energy of his race, he started out in life with the laudable ambition of building his fortune from the application of his energies to such enterprises as promised the best results. For ten years he followed school teaching as professor in Worcester, Brookfield, and Brimfield, Mass. and later in Iowa City, Iowa, where he erected a building for school purposes in which he taught for several years. He became identified in all material interests in this growing town, and a leader in all active movements promising general prosperity, such as organizing and conducting Sabbath schools, and giving tone to the observance of religious institutions. After several years of thorough pioneer labor in this town he returned to Massachusetts and devoted himself to teaching and trade for a while, when he returned to the West and entered upon teaching in the city of Detroit, Mich., under very auspicious circumstances: his pupils numbering 850, and requiring a large corps of efficient assistants. In the height of his success his health failed, when he was compelled to give up his school and seek for restoration of health in less exacting duties. The Northwest, in the region of Lake Superior, opened a new field for future work in the line of the book trade which bears a kinship to all his habits of life.

m. 1st, Deliverance Freeman, who d. Dec. 30, 1785 a. 25: m. 2d, 1786. Anna Thompson, who was b. Feb. 29, 1764. Major Childs died July 31, 1819: his widow Mrs. Anna Thompson Childs, died Oct. 3, 1838. Major Childs left Massachusetts when quite young and settled in Wilmington, Vt., where he dwelt the remainder of his long and active life, embracing the most thrilling and soul-stirring period in the history of the American Republic, when passing from colonial dependence upon Great Britain to the independent position of a separate and unique nationality. The strong mental forces of such a man would inevitably make themselves felt a power for good or ill. A true patriot, Major Childs took most decided stand for the liberties of the young confederacy of American colonies. Possessed of the warm, enthusiastic temperament characteristic of the name, Major Childs made his country's welfare his own, and was one of those Vermont braves whose patriotism was a proverb. His commission as Sergeant of the 5th Company of Infantry, of the State of Vermont, Judah Moore, Captain, and Josiah Fish, Colonel, in command of the 3d Reg't in the 2d Brigade, is lovingly cherished by his venerating grand-children. The quaint phraseology and embellished page, render it deserving a fac simile transcript in this volume, thus placing it in the keeping of each descendant. Major Childs home was upon a farm some two miles from the village of Wilmington, upon the bank of the Deerfield river, rendered now a most attractive, beautiful, and restful site, by the stately, graceful elms which so thrive in the New England soil; many of these noble trees were set out by Major Childs' own hand. Major Childs had two children of his first marriage, but we have been unable to learn much of them, beyond the fact that the daughter became a Mrs. Sage.

6212.  i.  LABAN  JONES  CHILDS, eldest son of Jairus and Betsey Jones Childs, b. in Wilmington, Windham county, Vt., Mch. 31, 1815, m. Aug. 3, 1837, by the Rev. Dr. Dana Hyde in Brattleboro, Vt., Miss Betsey Bassett.  For two years after his marriage Mr. Childs resided at the homestead; but the Bedouin element of which we have made mention as entering somewhat largely into the general mental constitution of the Childs family, was working upon Mr. Childs’ spirits and made itself manifest by a removal to Jacksonville, Vt., where Mr. Childs was engaged in mercantile business.  Bound to make good his claim to the talent requisite (according to the proverb), Mr. Childs returned to Wilmington in 1845, built and kept a hotel for some six years.  The glowing pictures of Western life were too alluring for his contentment, and in Sept. 1852, the family removed to St. Charles, Kane county, Ill., and became agriculturists; but Illinois was becoming a central State, and the rich farming lands of the rapidly growing State of Iowa were so attractive, that again Mr. Childs became a pioneer, and invested in a large farm about fifteen miles from the city of Council Bluffs, in Pottawattamie county, Iowa.  About thirteen years since Mr. Childs made, as he thinks, his last remove and became a resident of the thriving city of Council Bluffs.  Two children, a son and daughter, were given to Mr. and Mrs. Laban J. Childs, but the daughter was early called to the heavenly home.

6250. iv. Frederick C. Childs, b. Sept. 20, 1842, m. Nov. 7, 1866, Elizabeth King.

6251. v. John Lusk Childs, eldest son of Jonathan and Cynthia Lusk Childs, b. in Williamstown, Mass., Mch. 2, 1823, m. Jan. 15, 1851, Sara Van Derlip Merriam, dau. of Isaac Merriam. The character of John L. Childs has been drawn in manner mostfitting and chaste by his last pastor, Rev. J. O. Means of Boston Highlands, in a small volume, entitled "Everywhere a Christian," from which we make some extracts. The parents of Mr. Childs removed to Pittsford, Monroe county, N. Y., when he was about five years old, and such opportunities as the village public school, and good home training afforded were his until he was fourteen, when at his own request he was permitted to enter a store as clerk: here very strong temptations were about him, but he was delivered and enabled to acquire a reputation for perfect integrity and more than usual ability. At this period he adopted Chancellor Kent's course of reading, and to this in after years ascribed his literary tastes and culture. His eighteenth year was spent in the High School of Rochester, N. Y., with a quickened understanding and love for study which insured him success. From these pursuits he was recalled by the creditors of his late employer, (whose affairs had become embarrassed) for upon examination of the books kept by him, they were anxious to put the business into his hands to be closed, a task he accomplished most satisfactorily. At this time he became deeply impressed with the duty of personal acceptance of the truths of christianity, and thereafter his life-light shone with steadily increasing lustre till merged in the brighter light of heaven.

Mr. Childs went to Boston, in 1844, and entered a jobbing house, upon a salary so small as to be inadequate to his needs but for previous economy. He promptly connected himself with the church of which Dr. Edward N. Kirk was pastor, and soon became the close friend and frequent assistant of Dea. Daniel Safford, a man well known in New England for his piety and benevolence. In 1851, the year of his marriage, we find him a partner in the dry-goods house of Whitney & Fenno, a position attained by his intelligent, upright business habits. Severe sickness two years later compelled him to withdraw from the business, and seek health in a warmer climate, and he was restored. For a period he resided at the West, and everywhere left a strong impress of his rarely beautiful living. Gentleness, Courteousness, Cheerfulness and Humility were noticeable characteristics of Mr. Childs, while they came in some measure by nature they came more largely by grace, and they were sedulously cultivated as important elements of the Christ life. He made it a matter of prayerful self-discipline to correct infelicities of temper, and overcome peculiarities which might annoy others. Courteousness perhaps does not so well as humaneness, designate the large consideration he had for the feelings of others, and his carefulness by no tone of voice, or coldness of manner, or momentary forgetfulness, and by no impatience of attitude, no omission of the civilities of speech to fail in the amenities of social intercourse. At home, to his children and those employed in his household, there was the same unvarying gentleness and courtesy. "Religion was not with him a Sabbath-day garb," writes one qualified to speak, "it was everything." One who did not share Mr. Childs' religious opinions, but who knew him through and through, from long business acquaintance, and who had seen him wrong-side out and seam-side out if there was such a side to his character, when he heard of his death, exclaimed: "He was the best man I ever knew; I believe he was the best man that ever lived." It was his good fortune to accumulate some wealth; from the age of twenty-one he consecrated a tenth to the Lord, and often exceeded the amount in special benefactions. His last activity was the purchase of many valuable books wherewith to entertain and improve the young, especially young men. He was about to enter a new home in Easthampton, Mass., where he hoped to do much for Christ, among the young men gathered in the schools of that town, but the insidious disease consumption, which had been for years subtilly undermining his strength, wrought out its sure course, from earthly repose into that blessed sleep which God giveth to "His beloved," Mr. Childs entered the everlasting rest Nov. 16, 1868.

So admirable a sketch was given at the time of his decease, of the man and of his position in life, that we feel we cannot improve upon it, and can only say that such characters won't portray in words; the look and tone so frequent with humor, and true-hearted sunshine, must have been seen and heard to be known.

We give therefore entire the article referred to:

"Major A. B. Childs departed this life at his residence in Wilmington, on the 8th day of January, 1874, aged 74 years, 11 months and 5 days. The deceased was a native of Wilmington, and has been one of its most noted and influential citizens. He was the first merchant in the village; a prom-incent Free Mason for fifty-three years; post-master under every Democratic administration, beginning with President Jackson’s, holding the office twenty-four years. He was also deputy sheriff many years, and held other places of trust, in all of which he performed his duties with great exactness and perfect fidelity. But in his social connection, more especially, we feel to regret his loss. He was one of the original founders of the Universalist Society in Wilmington, and afterwards of the church connected therewith. He was decided, but not bitter, in his religious and political sentiments, and catholic in his bearing towards all. Strictly honest in his business transactions and temperate in his personal habits. His home has been a favorite resort of bright and pleasant people, and there the penniless wanderer found abundance of cheer. His intercourse with the community was always cheerful and peculiarly genial. Mr. Childs married young to a most estimable lady, Miss Hannah Lamb, also a native of Wilmington, whose death preceded his in August 28, 1870. They were blessed with a family of twelve children, ten of whom still survive to mourn their departure. In his family none could set better examples or manifest more devotedness to the interests, moral and pecuniary, of all its members, and these children now rise up and bless his memory. Without a murmur or complaint, in perfect resignation to the Providence of God and full of hope and faith in the universal redemption of the race, he passed away.

‘Like one who folds the drapery of his couch about him,
And lies down to pleasant dreams.’

The appreciation in which the subject of this notice was held, was fully evinced by the multitude that gathered to pay their tribute of respect on the occasion of his obsequies.

6273. vi. Helen Marilla Childs, b. Aug. 8, 1836, m. Sept. 3, 1856, John E. Clary.

6274. vii. George Lewis Childs, b. May 10, 1838. Drowned in Clear Lake in Minnesota, June 4, 1857. “He was a young man of much promise, beloved by all who knew him, noble-hearted, generous and manly; he gave up his own life in the vain effort to save the life of a companion. His remains were recovered, and rest with kindred dust in the Green Mountain State.”

[Tenth Generation.] Child:

[Eighth Generation.]

6269. ii. William Henry Childs, second son of Major A. B. and Hannah Lamb Childs, b. in Boston, Mass., Sept. 17, 1828. m. Miss Anna Parker Goodrich, dau. of Capt. James Goodrich of Portsmouth, N. H., who was born Sept. 7, 1830. Mr. William Childs left school and home at the age of 17, entering a dry-goods store, in Roxbury, Mass.; his employer Edwin Lamist, Esq., after a time was chosen postmaster, and young Childs was placed in the post-office. A few years later he went into a banking house in Boston, Mass., where he continued until impaired health compelled a change of climate. With his wife Mr. Childs removed to St. Paul, Minnesota, in the winter of 1855, and entered upon pioneer life with enthusiasm, locating his home in Lexington, Minn., upon the shore of a charming lake. Identifying himself with energy in the advancement of the new territory, Mr. Childs made for himself a place of honor and was by his fellow-citizens placed in many offices of responsibility. An invasion of the Sioux upon the settlement, shadowed and endangered every home: women and children were placed in safety, while fathers, husbands and brothers, remained to save the homes. This experience, almost immediately succeeded by the war of the Rebellion, necessitated changes, and many pioneer homes were deserted. Mr. Childs entered the service of the American and U. S. Express Co.'s, and settled with his family in St. Paul, Minn. Some ten years later, about 1873, another removal led him to the shores of the Pacific, whence his next transfer will be no doubt to Japan, or Australia. In San Francisco, Mr. Childs serves his country under "Uncle Sam" as store keeper. [Ninth Generation.] Child:

6284. i. Ida Agnes Childs, b. Oct. 26, 1856, in Wilmington, Vt.

6272. v. Adna Lyman Childs, third son and fifth child of Maj. A. B. and Hannah Lamb Childs, b. in Wilmington, Vt., Aug. 26, 1834, m. Jan. 6, 1861, Miss Annette Fox, daughter of Alonzo and Calista Fox of Woodford, Vt. Mr. Childs is in business in his native place, catering for the home-comforts of his townsmen.

[Ninth Generation.] Child:

6289. i. Frank Fox Childs, b. Feb. 1865.
[Eighth Generation.]

6273. vi. Helen Marilla Childs, third dau. and sixth child of Maj. A. B. and Hannah Lamb Childs, b. in Wilmington, Aug. 8, 1836, m. Sept. 3, 1856, Mr. John E. Clary of Deerfield, Mass. Mr. Clary died in Wilmington, Sept. 4, 1861, and Mrs. Helen M. Childs Clary resides with her children, in Deerfield, Mass.

[Ninth Generation.] Children:

6290. i. George Lewis Clary, b. Aug. 21, 1857, in Deerfield, Mass.
6291. ii. Millie Alice Clary, b. Nov. 30, 1858.

[Eighth Generation.]

6275. viii. Asaph Parmalee Childs, fifth son and eighth child of Maj. A. B. and Hannah Lamb Childs, b. June 10, 1840. Graduated at Powers Institute, Bernardston, Mass., in 1858. On the breaking out of the late civil war, Mr. Childs enlisted in Company F, of the 16th Vermont Regiment: was detailed into Quartermaster Woodford's office. He served three years. After the war Mr. Childs entered upon the study of the law, and graduated with high honors from the Columbian Law School, Washington, D. C. Mr. Childs has not practiced law actively, but is associated with a brother in Insurance. During the period of Centennial anniversary celebrations in Vermont, Mr. A. P. Childs and a younger brother published a small paper containing addresses, accounts of festivities, notices of valued and valuable relics of the revolutionary period and association, and other items incident to such times and deeds: very readable little sheets, deserving preservation for reference at the next Centennial. Mr. A. P. Childs married in July, 1873, Miss Sarah P. Cady, daughter of David Cady, Esq., of Bennington, where they now reside.

[Ninth Generation.] Children:

6292. i. Ethel Childs, b. Aug. 30, 1874.
6293. ii. Lucia Lamb Childs, b. Dec. 14, 1876.

[Eighth Generation.]

6276. ix. Esther Maria Childs, fourth dau. and ninth child of Maj. A. B. and Hannah Lamb Childs, b. March 9, 1843, in Wilmington, Windham county, Vt., m. July 1, 1860, Kittredge Haskins, Esq., counsellor at law, now of Brattleboro, Vt., son of Asaph and Amelia Haskins of Dover, Vt. Mr. Haskins is a commendable exemplification of the native American power to conquer circumstances, and make fate, unaided by adventitious surroundings. He studied law in Wilmington, and was admitted to the bar in 1854. In 1861, with wonted enthusiasm, he enlisted with the nine months troops in Co. I, of the 16th Vt. Regt.; was advanced to Lieut. and Acting Quartermaster while in service. Upon his return to Vermont he removed to Brattleboro, ever since his home, and has become one of the leading men of his State, serving in different posts most honorably to his constituents and creditably to himself. Mrs. Haskins possesses most markedly the Child characteristics, full of the bonhommie and ready repartee which rendered her father so attractive in the social circle, with a most felicitous use of the pen; and serving the Master with heart and voice in the beautiful chants of the church.

[Ninth Generation.] Child:

6294. i. Johnnie Adna Childs Haskins, b. June 1, 1861, in Williamsville, Vt., d. March 27, 1864.

[Eighth Generation.]

6279. xii. Frederick Willard Childs, the sixth son, the twelfth and youngest child of Maj. A. B. and Hannah Lamb Childs, b. Sept. 16, 1849, in Wilmington, Vt., m. Jan. 8, 1878, Emma Maria Fullerton, dau. of the late Frederick E. and Philette Wentworth Fullerton, and granddaughter of the Hon. Merrick Wentworth of Chester, Vt. There seems throughout the Child family, in the different branches, a strong desire to have all the world insured against something; whether this arises from the large philanthropy of the race, or no, we leave others to judge. It will be found a noticeable pursuit of the living members of this great tribe, and we find Mr. F. W. Childs, after a training of some years, in the military school of Prof. Charles Niles of Brattleboro, Vt., and the Williston Seminary in East Hampton, Mass, has devoted himself to thus preserving the lives and property of others, as well as his own.

[Ninth Generation.] Child:

6295. i. Ruth Wentworth Childs, b. June 27, 1880, "at 1:10 o'clock p. m." The father in a telegram says: "She is bright as a button, hair black as coal, large blue eyes. Baby's for Hancock and English!" [Poor, dear child, begins life in disappointment in the result of her first vote! — E. C.]

[Fifth Generation.]

5836. i. Ebenezer Child, sixth child and fifth son of Samuel and Hannah Barnard Child, b. in Deerfield, Mass., Nov. 11, 1720, m. about 1750, Rachel —, and removed to Shutesbury, Mass. He was prominent in church and town affairs, for many years a worthy deacon in the Congregational church. He removed from Shutesbury to Shelburne, Mass., about 1774, or '5, and with his wife joined the Congregational church in that town. He died in Shelburne in 1774. The Shutesbury Town Clerk says:

"Ebenezer Child was selectman for about ten years, proprietor clerk about twelve years, two or three years town clerk and was of great note in town affairs, in those days, as I find his name in almost all town business."
Deacon Ebenezer Child is on the certified list of tax payers in Shelburne with his son Ebenezer; the father paying £2, and the son £1, annual tax. In furnishing some account of this family, Rev. Theophilus Packard, says:

"I could furnish some further particulars and dates concerning nearly all of the above named, and some of their descendants also I can furnish you by consulting my notes, and various documents, if such materials are what you wish for the Child's genealogy. But though I have many valuable statistics as to the tribes of the Childses, I will gladly and gratuitously furnish them to you if you deem them suitable for your profound work. Still as I may not live to answer a letter to you, I will name a few persons with their address, who can give particulars."

Then follow the names with the address. Letters addressed to them were never answered and the particulars desired never obtained. The aged, infirm and our unseen friend probably did not live to render further aid, as letters subsequently addressed to him were not answered, with one or two exceptions.

[Sixth Generation.] Children: Four children are recorded in the town records of Shutesbury, Mass., there may have been more.

[Sixth Generation.]

"They joined the Shelburne church by profession in 1778. Mrs. Child was a most excellent and godly woman. Dr. Child was long a highly respected physician in Shelburne. I knew him well and have taken his pills when a boy. My father, who lived a while in his family, has told me interesting incidents respecting him." He d. Nov. 13, 1813, a. 57; she d. in 1834.

[Seventh Generation.] Children. The descendants of this branch add the terminal "s." and were all born in Shelburne, Mass.

6311 i. Elizabeth Childs, b. 1780, d. Mch. 29, 1782.

6312. ii. Nathan Childs, b. 1783, d. 1795.

6313. iii. Ebenezer Childs, Jr., b. 1786. This son was a physician, and practiced in Shelburne, Mass., many years. He had several children, of whom were Albertus and Eben Childs, reported to be residents of Lincoln, Lincoln county, N. C., with whom the father is said to have lived some three years since at 90 years of age. Our efforts to obtain a fuller account of this branch have been unavailing.

6314. iv. Charles Doolittle Childs, b. 1788, m. Catharine Arms.

6315. v. Linus Childs, b. 1790, d. unm. in the State of New York many years since.

6314. iv. Charles Doolittle Childs, fourth child and third son of Dr. Ebenezer and Elizabeth Frary Childs, b. in Shelburne, Mass., July, 1788, m. Feb. 13, 1813, Catharine Arms of Greenfield, Mass. He emigrated to the State of New York in 1827, and settled in the town of York, Livingston county, N. Y. He was a tanner and currier by trade. After his removal to the State of New York, he was not confined to this branch of business, but engaged in other enterprises which rewarded his foresight and well-laid plans for legitimate and handsome accumulations. A man of enlarged views, of high and noble aims, his influence was efficiently and happily felt in the community, and no good moral and religious enterprise lacked his hearty support. Mrs. Childs was not less highly esteemed for her personal virtues, her genial disposition, her firmness of principle, her devotion to the interests of her household and conscientious discharge of all Christian duties. They had five children, all born and baptized in Shelburne, Mass.

[Eighth Generation.] Children:

6321. ii. Catharine Arms Childs, b. May 9, 1818, m. July 17, 1845, Rev. Edwards Marsh.

6322. iii. Charles Dwight Childs, b. June 5, 1820, m. 1st. Jan. 12, 1843, Louisa Hamilton; m. 2d. Elizabeth Illender.

6324. v. George Arms Childs, b. Mech. 27. 1835, m. Mech. 4, 1856, Susan Doty of Lockport, N. Y.

[Eighth Generation.]

6321. ii. Catharine Arms Childs, second child and dau. of Charles Doolittle and Catharine Arms Childs, b. in Shelburne, Mass., Mech. 9, 1818, m. July 17, 1845, Rev. Edward Marsh. Mr. Marsh was born of Christian parents. His father was an honored minister of the Presbyterian church, whose ancestry is traced to Oliver Cromwell. This son was reared amid the influences of happy domestic relations and favorable conditions of society, for bringing out the best elements of character, all conspiring to fit him for healthful and efficient public life. Known to us during his preparatory studies for professional life, it is our pleasure to speak of him as a man and a christian, of the best characteristics. He carried in his face the marks of an ingenuous and unselfish nature, almost sure to captivate the favor and confidence of any one who could appreciate the signs of a noble heart. Earnest as a christian, laborious as a minister, his life was by no means a negative one. His influence was positive, aggressive. The results of his earnest, active life, are favorably known in the fields of labor which he successfully cultivated till he was called by the Master to the higher life.

Mr. Marsh was twice married, fortunately in both instances. His first marriage to a Miss Thompson, a niece of Rev. Dr. Perine, Professor in Auburn Theological Seminary, under whose training in part Mr. Marsh received his theological education. By this marriage he had five children. It would be our pleasure to record their names had they been given us.

His second marriage to Miss Catharine Arms Childs was not less fortunate. She was the daughter of a worthy and esteemed family of the New England stamp, which brought to their new home in Western New York, the refining and elevating influences of thorough christian training. The position of her family secured for her education and refinements, which justly gave her influence in society, and rendered her a valued companion to her worthy husband. There were no children by this marriage.

[Eighth Generation.]

6325. iii. Charles Dwight Childs, third child and eldest son of Charles Doolittle and Catharine Arms Childs, b. in Shelburne, Mass., June 5, 1820, m. 1st, Jan. 12, 1843, Louisa Hamilton; m. 2d, April 29, 1866, Elizabeth Illender. Residence of Mr. Childs, Ionia, Mich.

In boyhood and early youth Mr. Childs enjoyed the advantages of an ordinary education. Having been trained by a judicious father in habits of industry, he was qualified for positions of much responsibility. He obtained employment as a clerk in a store where he developed the essential characteristics of a successful business man. He was not long in securing promotion in business relations. Though naturally diffident and retiring, he possessed sufficient self-reliance to assume responsibilities which never suffered at his hands. His industry, his perseverance and integrity in work furnished him, won the confidence of thorough business men who knew the value of such habits in a trusted agent and associate. It has been no part of the purpose of his life to live solely for himself. Whatever has been vital to the progress of sound morality and religion has enlisted his sympathies and his cordial support. He holds the offices of auditor and general purchasing agent of the Detroit & Lansing Railroad Company, Michigan.

[Ninth Generation.] Children. By first wife:

6334. iv. Silas Dickenson Childs, second son of David and Clarissa Dickenson Childs, b. in Conway, Mass., May 29, 1794, m. Roxana Parker of Utica, N. Y.

The following tribute to the memory of Mr. Childs is taken from "Historical Sketches of Presbyterianism" within the bounds of the Synod of Central New York, by Rev. Dr. Fowler:

Mr. Childs commenced a clerkship in his native place; removed to Utica in 1816. He first took a place in the dry-goods store of Stalham Williams, then went as a book-keeper to the office of Jason Parker, widely known as the proprietor of extensive stage lines. Marrying the daughter of his employer, he was admitted, together with the Hon. Theodore S. Faxon, to a partnership with him in 1820; his business associations with Mr. Faxon lasting for forty years, and their stage business till 1836. Alive to the public welfare he attended to the public interests in such stations as bank and factory, and railway directorships, and as trustee of the Female Academy and the Orphan Asylum and Cemetery Association. Upright, faithful, honorable, kind and sympathising, he was always the quiet, modest and dignified gentleman, never suffering taint or suspicion. Dropping instantly dead in a banking-room, the whole community felt the shock and shared the bereavement and grief. He made liberal donations to public institutions. Among them $30,000 endowing a professorship,* called "Children," for Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., to which Mrs. Childs sympathising with her husband, added $60,000, also erecting at her own expense a beautiful chapel for the Utica cemetery.

Capt. Timothy Childs, of Deerfield, was a distinguished patriot of the Revolution. He led a company of minute men from Deerfield on receiving the news of the battle of Lexington, (Mass.) His son, Dr. Timothy Childs of Pittsfield, Mass., was marching as Lieut. with a similar corps at the same time from Pittsfield.

6500. iii. Dr. Timothy Childs, third child and second son of Capt. Timothy and Mary Wells Childs, b. in Deerfield, Mass., April 9, 1748, m. Feb. 1, 1778, Rachel Easton, dau. of Col. James Easton of Pittsfield, Mass., who commanded the troops under Ethan Allen in the storming of Ticonderoga. Col. Easton sacrificed his whole fortune, with the most uncalculating patriotism, in the service of his country. Mrs. Boardman writes:

"Dr. Timothy Childs, with his father, was in the battle of Lexington commanding a company of minute men, like his father, though but a Lieutenant, and was noted for his bravery and patriotism. He was an ardent advocate of the people's rights, and of our Republican form of Government. During the struggle for independence he participated actively and zealously by every means in his power, to promote the views and the objects of the heroes and patriots of the Revolution. As a physician, Dr. Timothy Childs was eminently successful and useful. As a public man he was faithful and able. As a testimony of the people's confidence, they for many years elected him to represent them in the Legislature of Massachusetts, both in the House and in the Senate; which stations he filled to the perfect satisfaction of his friends. He died at the age of 76, having long enjoyed the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens. His death was regarded as a public loss. Dr. Timothy Childs and his noble wife reared a family of eight children, five sons and three daughters, whose public record, particularly that of the five sons, has obtained an honorable eminence."

Mrs. Dr. Powers of Coldwater, Mich., a grand-daughter of Dr. Timothy and Rachel Easton Childs, and daughter of Mrs. Sophia Childs Ledyard, in a letter to her cousin, Mrs. Dr. Boardman, writes:

"I feel a great pride in my mother's family, as I recall them coming and going at the old home in Pittsfield, the years I was there: I did not take it all in then, the significance of all they said and did, but the facts made an indelible impression and as I recall them now I know that the actors were a company of superior men and women. Grandma Childs was a woman of great pride in family and education, consequently those two points have been the foundation of my estimate of people ever since. If money comes with them well and good, it is a great blessing, but gold makes vulgarity more vulgar, and ignorance more unbearable. Grandpa and grandma Childs had spent their lives in contact more or less with the best stamp of New England people, and grandma had great good sense, and freshness of character, which led her into sympathy with us girls, and made her very watchful of our tendencies. I bless her dear memory every day of my life, for what she did for me, and my child also reaps the benefit of it, and so on to the generations yet to come, if so be there are any."

This charming sketch of the characters, and characteristics of one of the quiet homes of New England, and the light evermore radiating therefrom, is one more blessed fulfillment of the fifth command of the Decalogue with its unfailing, gracious promise.

Dr. George S. Boardman was a divine of the Presbyterian church, well known and beloved. Born in Albany, N. Y., on the 29th Dec. 1796. At sixteen years of age he entered Union College, Schenectady, N. Y. When twenty-three years old he graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary, N. J., and entered at once upon the work of the ministry. With earnest zeal for two years he labored in an evangelistic form in the States of Ohio and Indiana. His first settlement was in Watertown, N. Y., and from various causes he was led to make several changes, at one time settled in Rochester, N. Y. His last pastorate was in the beautiful village of Cazenovia, N. Y. A residence there of fifteen years, closed in 1865, at which time he went to Europe with his wife, returning after fourteen months absence, rested and strengthened. Rev. Dr. Torry, Dr. Boardman's successor in Cazenovia, says of him in a memorial pamphlet, containing Dr. Boardman's last sermon preached on the 29th Dec. 1876, (his eightieth birthday):

"His preaching has been characterized by a freshness and vigor of thought, and a fullness of intellectual strength, and an elegance and eloquence of style sometimes, and a fire of earnestness and animation in the delivery, which have been frequently spoken of as wonderful by those who have heard him."
Dr. Boardman "went home" on the 7th of February, 1877.

"David Wells Childs, son of Dr. Timothy of Pittsfield, Mass., was born 1781. Was graduated at Williams College in 1800. Four years later he established himself in law in Utica, N. Y. Was clerk of the first board of trustees of the village. Director of the Bank of Utica, 1812; bank's attorney and notary public. His profession and other business secured for him much wealth. He was an extensive real estate owner in the village. His residence was on Whitesboro street, now occupied by John F. Seymour, Esq. He was a man highly esteemed for his integrity and liberality. He died July 27, 1826, of consumption. By his will, provisions were made for legacies to the following institutions: $250 to the Utica Sunday School; legacies to Auburn Theological Seminary, Western Education Society, and American Bible Society, $500 each. His wife died Dec. 14, 1820."

Entered the medical profession, and became eminent as a physician distinguished in medical science, and was the founder of Berkshire, Mass., Medical Institute, which became a college in 1837, in which he was professor of the theory and practice of medicine and president until 1863. He was a Jeffersonian Democrat. In the affairs of State he was justly influential, and promoted to official positions where statesmanship and patriotism were essential qualifications: having served in the legislative halls of Massachusetts and once filled the office of Lieut.-Governor. He had several children but all died before him except Mrs. Elias Merwin of Boston, Mass." (See Dict. of Am. Biog. page 183.

Mrs. M. C. L. Powers was educated at one of the best schools in New England, in Pittsfield, Mass., residing at the time in the family of her grandmother, Mrs. Dr. Timothy Childs, a woman X-1 of most noble nature and admirably qualified to guide, and elevate those with whom she was associated. To the wise and loving counsels, and beautiful daily life of her grandmother, Mrs. Powers delights to attribute her best ambitions and noblest qualities. Dr. David Cooper Powers is a native of Croydon, Sullivan county, N. H.; his grandfather David Powers, was one of four brothers who removed from Massachusetts to New Hampshire in 1766. The Cooper family was also a leading one in the same town, and from each family there are found individuals taking prominent parts in the Revolutionary struggle. The Powers family were characterized by giant frames, great physical strength and vigorous intellects. Mr. Powers' father removed to the State of New York in 1830, and settled in Cayuga county. At the Cayuga Academy, Auburn N. Y., Dr. Powers was educated. He read medicine in the office of his brother-in-law, Dr. Nathaniel Leavitt, and graduated at the Berkshire Medical College, Pittsfield, Mass., in 1848. The years 1848 and '49 he spent in California; in 1850 he returned and resided in Auburn, N. Y., but in 1853 went again to the Pacific coast for two years. In 1855-6 he settled in Coldwater, Mich., where he yet resides in the lucrative practice of his profession. At the period of the late war, he was enrolled, as a surgeon attached to Loomis Battery, and was in active service for three years in the field or in charge of hospitals in the army of the Cumberland at Huntsville and Nashville, Tenn. Devoted to his profession, Dr. Powers has found little time for public affairs, but for some years has been a director of the Southern Michigan National Bank, and for a much longer time a member of the Board of Education, for three years mayor of the city. Always interested for public improvements and actively zealous in word and deed in the support of church interests. He is held in high esteem by the medical fraternity and his patrons for his skill and caution, and regarded by the community as a most honorable and high minded citizen.

6510. viii. GENERAL THOMAS CHILDS, son of Dr. Timothy and Mary Easton Childs, b. in Pittsfield, Mass., 1796, m. Jan. 5, 1819, Ann Eliza Coryton, only child of Josiah and Catharine Coryton of Alexandria, Va. He died Oct. 8, 1853, a. 57. General Thomas Childs has a brilliant army record which has been furnished to us by his daughter, Mrs. General Woodbury, as also that of her husband, as found in General Geo. W. Cullum’s "Lives of Officers of the Army:"

"Major Childs was cadeted in the war of 1812 with Great Britain, in the campaign of 1814. On the Niagara frontier, engaged in the capture of Fort Erie; afterwards in the defence of Fort Erie until the siege was raised by the successful sortie from it Sept. 17, 1814, for which a brass quadrant, captured from a gun by him, was presented to him by Government, in the Florida war, 1836-42. Made Brevet Major Aug. 21, 1836, for planning the attack on the Indians at Fort Drane, Florida, and good conduct in that affair. Made Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Feb. 1, 1841, for gallant conduct and repeated successes in the war against the Florida Indians. Was Colonel of the Artillery battalion in the Military occupation of Texas, the "Army of Occupation" as it was called, from 1845 to 1847. CHAPTER XI.

REUBEN CHILDS AND DESCENDANTS.

Unfortunately the connecting link of this branch, between Reuben Childs, its known head and his emigrant ancestor has been lost. Much effort has been made to trace this line, by members of it and by ourselves; the impression has prevailed in the family that they were of the Deerfield line or Barnstable branch, as we term it. We have procured an accredited transcript of the Deerfield, Mass., town-records, as relating to the Childs name, but we fail to find there the birth or parentage of the Reuben Childs whose descendants we here give. It is quite possible that this family may belong to what we term the Watertown branch; there were those in this line (Watertown) who would have been contemporary with the father of said Reuben Childs, who married, but whose descendants we fail to trace. It is known that members of these families moved into the middle and western counties of Massachusetts and made new settlements; another coincident is found in the fact that some of the Watertown families, like the Deerfield, added the terminal "s." We give these incidents as possible clues. We have linked many living members by following clues as slight.

6607. Reuben Childs, (father unknown) m. about 1780, Thankful Bliss. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary army. Was at the battle of Bunker Hill, and also in the expedition to Ticonderoga, 1776 or '77. We place him in the fifth generation.

[Sixth Generation.] Children:

6608. i. Seth Childs, m. Emily Kneeland.
6610. iii. Sophia Childs, unmarried.
6611. iv. Dennis Childs m. Clarence Keyes.
6612. v. Horace Bliss Childs, m. Mary Clark Jenney.
6613. vi. Sylvester Childs, m. Mary Keyes.
6614. vii. Thankful Childs, m. Oliver Smith.

[Sixth Generation.]

6609. ii. Joshua Childs, second child and son of Reuben and Thankful Bliss Childs, b. Nov. 29, 1784, m. Jan. 30, 1810,

[Seventh Generation.] Children:

6620. vi. Thomas Spencer Childs b. in Springfield, Mass., Jan. 19, 1825, m. 1st, Mech. 7, 1855, Mary E. Porter; m. 2d, Aug. 24, 1864, Jane Lawrence Perkins.

[Seventh Generation.] 6615. i. Otis Childs, eldest child of Joshua and Susan King Childs, b. at Wilbraham, Mass., Mech. 19, 1811, m. Abby Holman, dau. of Samuel and Mary Warriner Holman of Springfield, Mass. She was born in Wilmington, Vt., Dec. 7, 1813, d. Sept. 23, 1879. Mr. Childs is a jeweller and resides at Newton, Mass.

[Eighth Generation.] Children:

6621. i. Mary Lowrie Childs, b. at Milledgeville, Ga., Oct. 11, 1841, d. at Wilbraham, Mass., Sept. 19, 1848.

6622. ii. Nelly Sargeant Childs, b. at Milledgeville, Ga., May 21, 1843, m. Oct 16, 1867, Thomas Weston, Jr.

6623. iii. Elizabeth Delancy Childs, b. at Milledgeville, Ga., Nov. 13, 1845, d. at Milledgeville, Ga., Sept. 26, 1847.

[Ninth Generation.] Children:
6629. i. Grace Weston, b. at Springfield, Mass., May 15, 1870.
6630. ii. Abby Childs Weston, b. at Newton, Mass., July 21, 1873.
6631. iii Thomas Weston, Jr., b. at Newton, Mass., Aug. 12, 1875.

[Eighth Generation.]
6624. iv. Edwin Otis Childs, fourth child and eldest son of Otis and Abby Holman Childs, b. at Milledgeville, Ga., Sept. 29, 1847, m. at Newton, Mass., June 25, 1874, Caroline A. Chaffin, dau. of Edwin and Caroline A. (Gore) Chaffin of Newton, Mass. Mr. Childs is City Clerk.

6632. i. Mary Chaffin Childs, b June 19, 1875.
6634. iii. Carrie Helfenstine Childs, b. Nov. 22, 1878.

[Seventh Generation.]
6616. ii. Mary King Childs, second child and eldest dau. of Joshua and Susan King Childs, b. in Wilbraham, Mass., Mech. 10, 1813, m. Oct. 3, 1833, Hon. Walter Lowrie, second son of John and Catharine Cameron Lowrie. Mrs. Mary King Childs Lowrie was born in the home of her maternal ancestry, with the very beautiful scenery of the Connecticut valley to educate her budding powers, and with like surroundings she grew to womanhood. Her father's home was in Springfield, Mass. With most helpful moral and intellectual atmosphere she attained an early and gracious maturity. At the age of fifteen she opened a private school and was so manifestly gifted as an instructor, that three years later she was called to the charge of a select school in Washington, D. C. In the metropolis she met Dr. Lowrie and became his wife and the very conscientious, loving mother of his children, winning their hearts and training them with fond tenderness; they ever reverenced her. Mrs. Lowrie was of strong affections, and intense inner life; her early religious training developed a rarely symmetrical character, and it is difficult to specify excellencies, where the harmony was so entire. Thoroughly united with Mr. Lowrie in his very single-eyed devotion to the Master's service, she very cordially and quietly accepted the self-denials brought upon her thereby. Upon the removal to New York City, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lowrie became the headquarters of the missionaries, whether en-route to the distant homes with hopeful zeal, or returning, worn with toils and discouragements.
A thoroughly ordered household, where a wise economy rendered possible a generous hospitality, was the result of Mrs. Lowrie's systematic mind; her equable temper and genial spirit made a sunny home. The correspondence of Mrs. Lowrie with the sons in the mission fields, has furnished not only a story of their experiences otherwise unknown, but most sweet expression of their fond love and reverence for her. Mrs. Lowrie made time also for numerous interests outside the home; she was for years the accurate and efficient treasurer of "The House of Industry;" and much interested in the establishment of the Presbyterian Home for Aged Women. The services of the Sabbath were deemed a privilege not to be easily relinquished. One writes: "In the winter of her last sickness this seemed to me a weekly miracle. She received strength to dress and walk to church by half past ten, while every other day she was overcome by sleep until about eleven."

Very earnestly she prayed for strength to care for her husband through his life, and it was given her. The disease which had been for years subtilely undermining her powers was stayed until her loved husband was taken home; then it overpowered her and she sank speedily. During these last months she was in the home of her brother Rev. Thomas S. Childs, D. D. of Norwalk, Ct., (now of Wooster, Ohio) the sweet trust and hope of her life was darkened; and for a time she was filled with doubts, but at "evening time it was light," and the loving friends watched her quietly enter into peace. We gather these facts from an interesting memorial prepared for private distribution, and sent us by Dr. Thomas S. Childs, the brother of Mrs. Lowrie, in whose home she spent the last months of life. The accompanying sketch of her husband is sent to us by Mr. Walter C. Childs of San Francisco, Cal.

Hon. Walter Lowrie was the second son of John and Catherine Cameron Lowrie, and was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, Dec. 10, 1784: came to America in his ninth year. He first married Miss Amelia McPherrin of Butler, Pa.; second marriage to Miss Mary King Childs. During his early years he manifested a most earnest love of study; his attainments were not confined to the English branches, he made the study of Latin, Greek and Hebrew a delight, and in later years was versed in the Chinese language. He designed to enter the ministry but was by circumstances kept in secular life.
From a memorial address by the Rev. Wm. M. Paxton of New York City, we extract:

"His life was such as to win the confidence and esteem of the community in which he lived. In 1811, at the age of twenty-seven, he was elected representative to the Legislature of Pennsylvania, a position he held for seven years. During this time he so rose in the confidence of the people that in 1818 he was made United States Senator for six years. This was a period of great interest in the history of our country from the importance of the measures agitated and the great men who guided the councils of the nation. Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Randolph, Benton and others, only less illustrious, were members of the Senate. Among these distinguished statesmen Walter Lowrie occupied a position of honorable prominence. I am informed by one who was present at that time, that he was regarded by the Senators who knew him best, as an authority upon all questions of political history and constitutional law. During the discussion of the Missouri compromise he made a speech which is described as of great power and force of argument, in which he took strong grounds against the extension of slavery, and uttered his protest against the establishment of slave labor upon a single foot of free territory. Upon the expiration of his term as Senator, he was elected secretary of the U. S. Senate; in this office he continued twelve years. He had but two predecessors in office, each continued till death. Very much surprised, therefore, were the friends of Hon. Mr. Lowrie to learn of his resignation in 1836. His reason for so doing was that he might devote his life to the cause of missions, which he thenceforth served with untiring zeal and self-sacrifice, giving to it his time, his means, and his sons. Hon. Walter Lowrie died Dec. 14, 1868, aged 84. His eldest son, Dr. John C. Lowrie, labored in India. His third son, Rev. Walter M. Lowrie, entered the field in China, where he lost his life at the hands of Chinese pirates, Aug. 18, 1847. He was regarded a man of fine talents, and an accomplished scholar. The fourth son, Rev. Reuben Lowrie, succeeded his brother in China, but after six years fell a victim to the climate. Rev. Dr. John C. Lowrie returned from India and was his father's successor in the secretaryship of the Presbyterian Board of Missions: a post the father had most efficiently filled for thirty years."

[ Eighth Generation.] Children:

6635. i. Edward H. Ingle.
6636. ii. Susan Ingle, d. in.
6637. iii. Mary P. Ingle, d. in.

We were unable to obtain dates of birth of these children. Edward H. Ingle is an Episcopal clergyman in Athens, Ga. Joseph Lowrie Ingle is a physician in Baltimore, Md.

Mr. Childs left his native place in early youth and went to Milledgeville, Ga., where he spent ten years as clerk in a jewelry store. In 1846, he went to Athens, Ga., and commenced business for himself. Here he was prosperous and accumulated a handsome property, but the civil war swept nearly all away. At the close of the war, in 1864, he established himself in business again in the hardware trade. For the last five years he has held the office of president of the Northeastern Railroad of Georgia. His residence is Athens, Ga.

6620. vi. REV. THOMAS SPENCER CHILDs, D. D., sixth child and fourth son of Joshua and Susan King Childs, b. in Springfield, Mass., Jan. 19, 1825, m. 1st, Mech. 7, 1855, in Hartford, Ct., Mary E. Porter, dau. of Haynes Lord Porter, a descendant of Gov. Haynes, the first Governor of Connecticut; m. 2d, Aug. 24, 1864, Jane Lawrence Perkins, at Boston Highlands, Mass.

The surroundings of Dr. Childs from childhood have been eminently favorable to the development of the best elements of a manly character. Always living in the atmosphere of intelligent and refining influences, his training and culture have lacked nothing to give strength to a well balanced intellect. That there has been no waste of appliances, the fruits of an industrious and beneficent career bear ample testimony. His preparatory studies for entering college were pursued under Rev. Sanford Lawton of Springfield, Mass. In 1843, he entered the University of the City of New York, and graduated with first honors in 1847, the part of Valedictorian having been assigned him. He entered the same year Princeton Theological Seminary and graduated in 1850. Spending a fourth year in the Seminary in special studies, he was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New York, April 17, 1850. His first ministry was brief in Berkeley county, Va., and Southampton, L. I.  In 1851, he commenced ministerial labors in Hartford, Ct., and in 1852, at the organization of the First Presbyterian church in that city, he was ordained its pastor, where he continued till 1865, when he was called to the First Congregational church in Norwich, Ct., the pastorate of which he filled till 1870, when he was elected professor of Biblical and Ecclesiastical History in the Theological Institute of Connecticut, at Hartford, where he continued till 1878. In 1880, he was elected professor of Mental and Moral Science in the University of Wooster, at Wooster, Ohio. The esteem in which Dr. Childs is held as a private and public man in Hartford, Ct., is indicated by a brief notice in the Hartford Times of his appointment to the Wooster University Professorship:

"The many friends of the Rev. Dr. Thomas S. Childs, of this city, will hear with interest that he has accepted a professorship in the Presbyterian University at Wooster, Ohio. This institution, though young in years, is prospering greatly, and already has, in its various departments, between four and five hundred students. Dr. Childs takes the chair of Mental and Moral Science—a position of responsibility, and one which calls for just such intellectual ability, sound moral principle and careful training as Dr. Childs has, in a marked degree. While regretting to part with him here, his numerous friends will rejoice to know that he is going into so good a position. Dr. Childs will spend the winter, with his family, in Washington City, where he has an engagement to preach in the Western Presbyterian church, near Lafayette Square. His practical duties in the college will begin later on in the coming year."

Dr. Childs is publicly and favorably known through his published articles: various sermons, tracts, pamphlets and articles in the Princeton Review, and the "Heritage of Peace," are the issues of his pen. One of his late articles is a lecture delivered in the spring of 1880, to the Unitarian congregation of Hartford, Ct., at their request—topic, Christ His Own Witness,—published in the Hartford Times, and printed in tract form by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, as a valuable item of religious literature adapted for general circulation. The high esteem entertained for Dr. Childs by those holding differing religious opinions from himself, is proof of his candor in the defense of his christian faith, and of his ability to convince and win an honest inquirer after truth. Personally, Dr. Childs is gifted with characteristics which render his social life attractive. Accessible, affable and communicative, he finds his way easily to the confidence of all who are drawn within reach of his influence.
Of Mrs. Childs, his first wife, to whose memory a fitting tribute has been paid and preserved in a little volume, from which we quote, it may be said she possessed qualities of heart and mind, not less marked than some of those which give the Dr. deserved prominence.

Mrs. Mary Porter Childs b. in Hartford, Ct., April 11, 1826, only dau. of Haynes L. Porter, Esq., of that city, and a descendant of Governor Haynes of Connecticut and Massachusetts, a family of honor in both States at an early period. For her native city and state, Mrs. Childs cherished an especial fondness, she counted it one of the joys of her life that she was permitted always to dwell in it. She completed her school education under the able tuition of Rev. Thomas H. Gallandet, and continued to cultivate her mind by careful and extensive reading. To a few choice friends she gave a most ardent love, but the fondest affection was for her mother. It will not seem strange, therefore, that in her home she found greater charm than in society; a distrust of her own powers contributed to her shrinking from prominence anywhere.

When just past fifteen, in 1841, she was taken into the church of the Rev. Dr. Hawes. Her religious life was one of earnestness and conscientiousness, though her doubts and native reticence hindered expression of faith, while her natural buoyancy hid with a gleeful manner much of her depth of experience. In her marriage Mrs. Childs was peculiarly happy, the doubts which had shadowed her christian life fled away, and in her home she was the cheerful christian wife and mother, finding fullness of joy in her cares and quiet pleasures. The chastening hand of the Lord which she had keenly felt before, and to which she had learned to bow in the high attainment of a cheerful submission, came into her tenderly loved fold and bore away one of her lambs—even now she sorrowed in hope. In 1863 another child was given her, but after a few days she became alarmingly ill, her sufferings were most intense—a gleam of hope came, only to be shrouded. The fears and doubts of life disappeared, and in sweet calm she bade her loved ones farewell, and "walked with God." The accompanying lines of the gifted Mrs. L. H. Sigourney, on the occasion of her death, will most fittingly close our brief sketch:
"Mrs. MARY PORTER CHILDS,
Wife of the Rev. Dr. Childs, and only daughter of Haynes L. Porter, Esq.
Died at Hartford, April 4, 1863."

Her lip no longer tastes
Our cup of cares and pains;
The pale king vaunts his shaft no more;
The struggle and the pang are o'er;
The victory remains.

Her's was the home-delight
In woman's sphere that lies,
The love of life.—yet fearless trust
That looks complacent on the dust
From whence the soul shall rise.

Self-forgetful, and serene,
Guiltless of ambition's sway,
Her's were those duties free from strife,
That make a faithful Pastor's wife
The blessing of his way.

Babe,—that in thy Father's arms
Her coffin-bed beside,
Dost take the dear, baptismal seal
On thy fair brow, too young to feel What loss doth thee betide.

May its crystal wash away
Sinning, sorrowing tears.
And guide thee like a golden thread,
In thy blest mother's steps to tread,
Through all the coming years.

Little daughters, in your hearts
Plant the germ of Christian love, Spreading, ripening more and more.
Till you find the opening door

CHAPTER XII.

JEREMIAH CHILD OF SWANSEA AND DESCENDANTS.

[First Generation.]

6646. JEREMIAH CHILD. The first known of Jeremiah Child is what is gathered from the town records of Swansea, Mass., that he was born in 1645. Who his parents were we are not informed. His marriage is recorded and birth of his children and numerous descendants to the present day. He was a man of considerable prominence; became a "freeman" in 1680; a selectman in 1682; is possessed of real estate drawn by lot in 1686; conveys to his son John a tract of land in Warren, R. I., costing £8 16s., as recorded in the town records of Taunton, Mass. Married Martha —.

George W. Chase, Esq., of Providence, R. I., one of the descendants, in answer to inquiries as to the ancestor of Jeremiah Child, says:

"I have been unable to trace the origin of Jeremiah Child. He had three children that we know of, possibly he had more. He was probably twice married. In a deed dated 1689, he refers to "my now wife" Martha. In one deed he is called an innkeeper; in another a merchant. He was admitted "freeman" of Plymouth Colony, June 1, 1681, having been a resident of Swansea for some years previous."

Mr. Chase says:

"He married 2d, Elizabeth Thurber Estabrook, widow of Thomas Estabrook and daughter of John and Mary Thurber; his first wife was mother of all his children."

[Second Generation.] Children:

6647. i. JOHN CHILD, b. in Swansea, Mass., 1672, (G. W. Chase says, 1671), m. Margery Howard, about 1692.

Second Generation.

6648. JEREMIAH CHILD, Jr., second child of Jeremiah and Martha Child, b. in Swansea, Sept. 2, 1653, m. 1st, Mary —; she d. Feb. 23, 1734, æ 41; m. 2d, June 26, 1735, Mary Hatch; she d. Oct. 29, 1753, æ 63. His children were by the first wife.

Jeremiah was admitted freeman in May, 1729. The town records of Newport, R. I., where he resided, were destroyed during the Revolutionary War, and hence we have little information of the members of this family. Jeremiah was at first a cooper by trade, later a baker. On his gravestone appears the following quaint epitaph:

"Whether we rest or labour, work or play,
The world and glory of it pass away;
This day is past or near its even grown,
The next succeeding is to us unknown."

[Third Generation.] Children:

6994. iv. Thomas Child, m. May 17, 1738, Mary Toman.
6995. v. Mary Child, b. 1728, d. April 1730.
This is one of the instances where we have not been successful in establishing the connection with the emigrant ancestor. The earliest record found verified, is that of Benjamin Child born in 1697, in Watertown, and resided probably in Newton, Mass. Married May 24, 1722, Elizabeth Greenwood. This renders it probable that his ancestor was among the early settlers of the name in Watertown, and allied to those whose birthplace is traced to that town. The future may reveal the further history which will lead to the exact facts in the case. We conclude therefore to place Benjamin in the generation of his contemporaries.

[Third Generation]

He was a physician of much prominence in his profession in Boston, and a citizen highly respected. The following extract from an article in Calvin Cutler’s “Treatise on Anatomy and Physiology,” (published in a school book,) gives the peculiar circumstances of his death:

“The highly respected Dr. Wiley of Boston, lost his life by poisonous matter from the body of a patient, subjected to a post-mortem examination. He removed from his finger, previous to the examination, a hang-nail, and the poison from the dead body was brought into contact with the denuded part, and through the agency of the lymphatics, it was conveyed into the system.” He left no children.

From the daughters of Mrs. Maria O. Childs Bigelow, we receive a beautiful tribute to the worth and talents of their mother:

"Our parents were pioneers of this State (Tennessee), and first met in Nashville, Tenn. My mother, on the completion of her education, came to Tennessee and taught in the Nashville Academy, then one of the first institutions of the South. After six years my mother was married, and with her husband removed to Jackson, Tenn. Our father was a graduate of Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass. He built the first brick residence in the town. Five years after their marriage our father died, leaving my mother with three children. I must especially record my mother's indomitable energy and devotion to her children, whom she educated until my brother went to college."
For forty years Mrs. Bigelow was engaged in teaching after her marriage.

[Seventh Generation.] Children:

7107. i. Eliza Maria Bigelow, m. Dr. Mason.
7108. ii. Amanda C. Bigelow, b. Dec. 20, 1829, m. April 2, 1857, Dr. Jones.

Elijah Childs Bigelow was "educated by his mother until he entered college, where he displayed such intelligence and fine abilities as to induce our mother to consent to his studying law. Whilst thus engaged he was seized with hip disease and after three years suffering died, just twenty-one years of age. Not once did he murmur; beautiful and cheerful was that sick room; he died triumphant. 'He being dead yet speaketh.'"

[Seventh Generation.]

7110. i. Maria F. Mason, m. Mr. Nolan. "She came like a flower, and so passed away, when a young wife and mother, and with her infant son awaits the resurrection of the just."

AMHERST CHILD AND DESCENDANTS.

The first record we obtain of Amherst Child is in the town of Rutland, Mass., where his marriage is registered; and eight years later (1798) the town records state him to be the owner of land valued at $412. We have followed all known clues to ascertain his parentage, or birthplace, unavailingly. He may be of the Barnstable or Watertown lines, as descendants of each are found in Rutland. We give these in the generations of their contemporaries in other lines.

[Fifth Generation.]

7209. v. Hon. Albert Lucas Childs, third son and fifth child of Dr. Amherst and Lavissa Southwick Childs, born at Seneca Falls, N. Y., April 12, 1840. Received an early physical training upon a farm, which also fitted him to graduate, in 1861, at Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y. He studied law in the office of Hon. S. G. Hadley, and was admitted to practice in 1865. Was a member of the State Legislature for Seneca county in 1877. He has delivered a number of lectures, and is well known as a public speaker throughout Western New York. At present is editor and proprietor of the Seneca County News, a very lively, spicy sheet, that is a general favorite in Seneca county and vicinity. A. L. Childs has held a number of positions of trust and responsibility. Has been U. S. gauger a number of years; clerk of the superintendent of Cayuga and Seneca canal; justice of the peace, &c., positions which he has filled with credit and ability. Is author of a poem-lecture, the "Song of the Shoe," of a humorous nature, that has found favor before many audiences. The accompanying little poem, one of many flowing from the facile pen of the Hon. editor, we insert as a specimen of his humorous rythmical gifts:

"THE SHOE IS ON THE OTHER FOOT."

We always when in fine array,
The best foot forward try to put,
Yet often find to our dismay
The shoe is on the other foot.

One morning when the Sabbath bell
Was tolling with a solemn sound, Inviting sinners by its call,
From all the peaceful village round:

The gentle folk with guarded talk
And faces dignified, serene;
In Sunday-dress with measured walk
All moving toward the church were seen.

By some misfortune unrevealed,
Old Deacon Marble, clever soul,
Was hurrying churchward through the field,
Because the bell had ceased to toll!

But soon he reached the meadow brook,
And stopped and laid his Bible down;
The swollen stream with laughter shook
To see the Deacon wear a frown.

A single leap would not suffice,
And Deacon had no time to lose;
To jump a stream of such a size
   Would take the polish from his shoes!
He eyed his shoes with troubled look,
   And hesitated, sore perplexed;
And wondered could he wade the brook
   In time to hear the Parson's text!
A happy thought came by and by;
   One shoe and stocking off he took,
And thought with one bare foot to try
   And cross this saucy laughing brook!
With one foot bared, and one foot dressed,
   With shoe and stocking and his book,
Our Deacon with an earnest zest Prepares to cross the swollen brook.
By this economy, thought he,
   I soon the other side shall reach,
And then to church will safely be
   In time to hear the Parson preach.
Such Sunday work is sure no sin;
   But never did the Deacon dream
That he might put the wrong foot in The middle of the laughing stream.
By this mild bit of compromise
   I'll keep one foot from getting wet;
So back the Deacon steps and tries Upon the other side to get.
Now up he comes with lively leap,
   Most eagerly the task to try,
But dumps the wrong foot in the deep,
   And lands the bare foot high and dry!
With sorry phiz he sighs to see
   His Sunday stocking all wet through,
While giggling, rippling brook with glee
   Pokes fun at Deacon's dripping shoe!
Too late he now counts up the cost.
   Because the wrong foot in was put;
The text and sermon both are lost,
   The shoe was on the other foot!
So, often we in fine array,
   Our best foot forward try to put,
And often find to our dismay,
   The shoe is on the other foot!

Child:
CHARLES CHILD.

We must preface this group of the Child name, and the two succeeding with the same regretful unlinking to an emigrant ancestor. Several of these groups would doubtless come rightly in other positions, for there is presumptive evidence of their relationship. We have had strong hope to find the missing links, and while writing up the other parts of the work, have been constantly following every thread presented, if it might be, the labyrinth should be revealed.

The three following branches, unknown perhaps to each other are, we cannot doubt, the descendants of John and Elizabeth Child of Woodstock, Ct., (see page 427,) through their son Nathaniel who is with his known children given on page 440: as we there state, Nathaniel is known to have had a large family of children, but we find and trace but two sons. We have deemed it wise to place these lines in such order of generation as we find their contemporaries to be whose line of descent we are able to trace connectedly, as being more nearly correct, than to place them in the first and second generations and so on from the earliest known of the particular line.

CHAPTER XIII.

HENRY CHILD AND DESCENDANTS.

This line of the Child name in America is the only one of any considerable numbers whose home in the mother country is known with certainty.

7303. Henry Child resided in Coldshill, in the parish of Rindersham, Hertford county, England; or as another account says, at Horring Crook, England. He had quite a family of children, only one of whom seems to have emigrated to the New World. The family were of the society of Friends, as many of them still are. From William Penn, Henry Child made purchase of 500 acres of land, for which he paid £10 on the 20th of January, 1687. Henry Child accompanied his young son Cephas to America, in 1693, and the purchased land was then located in Plumstead, Bucks county, Pa., near the headwaters of the Neshamony. Cephas Child was placed for a time in some family in Philadelphia, where he was taught the carpenter's trade. In 1715, Henry Child, "for the love and affection he beareth to his son Cephas," gave the above mentioned five hundred acres of land to him. With the deed Cephas, and some others, went from Baltimore to Philadelphia on foot. Cephas Child married Mary Atkinson and settled in Plumstead, Pa. Henry Child did not remain long in America. We have the copies of two most loving letters addressed by him to his son Cephas, which we would give entire for the interest to descendants did our space permit. Each of these letters date from Horring Crook, the first date: "Ye 2d of 4 mo. 1729"; the second:

"Ye 22d of 3 mo., 1738.

"Dear Child:—I thought I might have had a line from thee by some at our yearly meeting. I should be glad to hear what family thou hast, and how things prosper with thee. I desire thou mayest seek the Lord above all, that His wisdom may guide thee in all thy undertakings, that His name and truth may be honored by thee, that His blessings and mercies may be with thee, through the great mercy of the Lord. I and my family are in health, and thy sisters and their families. I gave thee account of thy brother's departure in my last letter to thee; so with love to thee and thy wife and friends, in the truth of our Lord Jesus Christ, I rest thy loving father, HENRY CHILD."

We felt the gracious words of this epistle from the father of this line, would prove a genuine benison for his descendants, having lost none of its sweetness in the one hundred and forty-three years since it was penned.

[Second Generation.]

7304. CEPHAS CHILD, son of Henry Child of Hertford county, England, was born in England and came to America in 1693, and married Feb. 1716, Mary Atkinson. A most sad fate befell the first four children, they were burned in the accidental conflagration of the homestead.

These four died by burning.

[Third Generation.]

7313. ix. Isaac Child, youngest child and son of Cephas and Mary Atkinson Child, b. in Plumstead, Bucks county, Pa., Mech. 14, 1734, m. 1759, Rachel Bradshaw. Isaac Child was a minister among the Friends, and possessed of unusual spiritual gifts and grace. In 1757 he had a "vision" a full record of it is in the possession of one of his descendants: we would gladly have given some portion of it, or abstract, had it been in our power. Upon the descendants of Isaac Child a most loving, devout spirit has been transmitted. Isaac Child died April 5, 1769.

[Fourth Generation.] Children:

7471. iii. Isaac Child, Jr., b. July 20, 1765, d. Sept. 9, 1802, unmarried, in New York City, or Philadelphia, Pa.*
7473. v. Israel Child, b. Mech. 28, 1769, m. —.

* An acrostic by this son of Isaac Child will be found in the appendix—not being obtained in season to be placed elsewhere.

[To Mrs. Hart we are happy to acknowledge our indebtedness for our record so far as we possess it of the descendants of Israel and Permelia Child.]

[Seventh Generation.] Children:
7517. iii. Isaac C. Hart, b. Mech. 21, 1875.

We give next all we have received of another branch of this line, doubtless descendants of Abraham or Henry Child, sons of Cephas and Mary Atkinson Child, born in Plumstead, Bucks county, Pa., in the years 1724 and 1726. It is known to those now living in Morristown, Pa., that their grandfather came from Bucks county, and was of the society of Friends: his name was John Child, and he had brothers named George and Jesse, this is all we know of them. We therefore place the known head of this family in the fourth generation, as he would be if the son of one of the two brothers mentioned.

[Fourth Generation.]
7520. John Child, b. in Plumstead, Bucks county, Pa., about 130 or 140 years ago, m. Mary Phipps, daughter of a neighbor. "They left Bucks county, and settled near Plymouth Meeting in Montgomery county, about 110 years ago; had twelve children (all now deceased), eight of whom lived to be men and women.

[Fifth Generation.] Children:
7521. i. Mary Child, m. Mr. Pitt of Delaware county, had a large family, and has many descendants, not traced.
7522. ii. Petar Child, m. twice.
7523. iii. Sarah Child, m. John Conrad, raised a family of twelve children, nine sons and three daughters. Nine still living, married and with large families are settled near their old home at Plymouth Meeting, Pa.
7524. iv. James Child, unmarried, lived to be nearly 70 years old.
7525. v. Tacy Child, unmarried, lived to be over 70.
7526. vi. Elizabeth Child, m. John Robinson, moved to Ohio; had two children, a son and daughter, neither of them living and only one descendant, a great-grandson, 3 or 4 years old. (1880.)
7528. viii. Margaret Child, m. John Davis of Delaware county, had four children who grew up but have since died. leaving, it is believed, no issue.

[Fifth Generation.]
7522. ii. Petar Child, eldest son of John and Mary Phipps Child, b. probably in Montgomery county, Pa., and twice married, but we possess no dates, neither the names of his wives.

[Sixth Generation.] Children:
7529. i. JAMES CHILD, m. and has two daughters, names not sent.
7530. ii. SARAH CHILD, m. and has a family, no data thereof.
7531. iii. S. P. CHILD, m. and has three sons and three daughters, names and dates deficient.

[Fifth Generation.]
7527. xii. JOHN CHILD, Jr., youngest child of John and Mary Phipps Childs, b. in Montgomery county, Pa., 1796, m. Feb. 1822, Ann Moore, and d. Mch. 1825. We had written him as the seventh child, as in that order he had been named, and as no dates were given we could not tell where he should come. Have since learned he was the twelfth child.

[Sixth Generation.] Children:
7532. i. JACOB CHILD, m. and has two sons and two daughters. From Mr. Child we receive all this record, and greatly regret that he did not send the names of his children. To him we express our indebtedness for his pleasant response.
7533. ii. Infant son died young.

GEORGE WILLIAM CHILDS—Philadelphia, Penn.

One of the leading descendants of Henry Child of Colds Hill, Eng., whose record we have just closed, writes us that George William Childs is of their line. For this reason we place him in juxtaposition to this branch. It is pleasant to think that Mr. Childs belongs to so noble a branch.

The record we have of Mr. Childs is mainly that of extracts from printed sketches of his life, which have been called forth by such incidents as have marked his history. He was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1829.

His Boyhood.

Mr. James Parton in a sketch written in 1870, says:

His early friends in Baltimore do not depict him as in the least resembling the ideal boy of modern novels—the Tom Browns, who put forth their whole soul in foot-ball and cricket, and bestow the reluctant residue upon the serious business of school. With sincere deference to our honored guest, Mr. Thomas Hughes, I must beg leave to state, that superior men, who learn to govern themselves and direct affairs, do not spend their boyhood so. Not in the Rugby style do the Jeffersons, Franklin's, Pitts, Peels, Watts, nor the great men of business, nor the immortals of literature and art, pass the priceless hours of boyhood and youth. Such boys do not despise the ear and the bat, but they do not exalt the sports of the play-ground.
to the chief place in their regard. This boy certainly did not. He exhibited, even as a child, two traits seldom found in the same individual: a remarkable aptitude for business, and a remarkable liberality in giving away the results of his boyish trading. At school he was often bartering boyish treasures—knives for pigeons, marbles for pop-guns, a bird-cage for a book; and he displayed an intuitive knack in getting a good bargain by buying and selling at the right moment. At a very early age he had a sense of the value of time, and a strong inclination to become a self-supporting individual. He has told his friends that, in his tenth year, when school was dismissed for the summer, he took the place of errand-boy in a bookstore, and spent the vacation in hard work. This was not romantic, but it was highly honorable to a little fellow to be willing thus to work for the treasures that boys desire. At thirteen he entered the U. S. Navy, and spent fifteen months in the service: an experience and discipline not without good results upon his health and character.

He was a favorite among his boyish friends. One of them, Hon. J. J. Stewart, of Maryland, has recently said: "He was then what you find him now. His heart was always larger than his means. There is but one thing he always despised, and that is meanness: there is but one character he hates, and that is a liar. When he left Baltimore, a little boy, the affectionate regret of all his companions followed him to Philadelphia; and the attachment they felt for him was more like romance than reality in this every-day world. . . . I remember that he wrote to me years ago, when we were both boys, that he meant to prove that a man could be liberal and successful at the same time."

Let us see if the career of the man has fulfilled the dream of the boy.

Upon reaching Philadelphia, a vigorous lad of fourteen, he knew but one family in the city, and they, soon removing, left him friendless there. He found employment in his old vocation of shop-boy in a bookstore. Paying strict attention to business, working early and late for his employer, disdaining no honest service, he soon had an opportunity, young as he was, of showing that he possessed the rarest faculty of a business man—judgment. After shutting up the store in the evening, he was entrusted by his employer with the duty of frequenting the book auctions and making purchases: and by the time he was sixteen, it was he who was regularly deputed to attend the book trade-sales at New York and Boston business.

After serving in this capacity for four years, being then eighteen years of age, having saved a few hundred dollars capital, and accumulated a much larger capital in character, in knowledge of business, and in the confidence of business men, he hired a small slice of the Ledger building, and set up in business for himself. Already he felt that his mission was to conduct a great daily paper; already, he had said to himself, that paper shall be the Public Ledger.

Entrance upon Business at Eighteen Years of Age.

In his narrow slip of a store in the Ledger building, he bestirred himself mightily and throve apace. Faculty is always in demand: and I say again, a young man generally gets a step forward in his career about as soon as he is able to hold it.
BECOMES A MEMBER OF THE FIRM OF R. E. PETERSON & CO.

Before he was quite twenty-one, we find him a member of that publishing firm which afterwards obtained so much celebrity and success under the title of Childs & Peterson. The intelligent head of the old firm of R. E. Peterson & Co. had the discernment to see his capacity, and sought an alliance with him. It was a strong firm: for the talent it contained was at once great and various. Mr. Peterson and his family had considerable knowledge of science and literature, and Mr. Childs possessed that sure intuitive judgment of the public taste and the public needs without which no man can succeed as a publisher. He had, also, that strong confidence in his own judgment which gave him courage to risk vast amounts of capital, and even the solvency of the firm, upon enterprises at which many a more experienced publisher would have shaken his head.

There is no business so difficult as that of publishing books. Few succeed in it, and still fewer attain a success at all commensurate with the energy and risk which it demands. In the firm of Childs and Peterson there was much of both kinds of judgment—that which comes of general knowledge, and that which results from a knowledge of the world. Consequently, nearly all of its ventures were successful. They published few books, but they frequently contrived to make a great hit once a year. Mr. Peterson compiled a work from various sources called "Familiar Science," which Mr. Childs' energy and tact pushed to a sale of two hundred thousand copies, and secured for it a footing in many schools, which it retains to this day.

We all remember with what skill and persistence Mr. Childs trumpeted the brilliant works of Dr. Kane upon "Arctic Explorations," and how he made us all buy the volumes as they appeared at five dollars, and how glad we were we had bought them when we came to read them. Nor was Dr. Kane ill-pleased to receive a copy-right of about $70,000.

Among the massively useful books bearing his imprint, there is that truly extraordinary enterprise, "Dr. Allibone's Dictionary of English and American Authors," which is dedicated to Mr. Childs. It is questionable if there has ever been produced by one man a book involving a greater amount of labor, or one containing a smaller proportion of errors, than this colossal dictionary. Often as I have had occasion to use it, I have never done so without a new sense of its wonderful character. Probably when Mr. Childs undertook its publication, there was hardly another publishing house in the world that would have given the laborious author any encouragement; and it is safe to add that but for the outbreak of the war, he would have pushed it to a compensating sale. Other costly works published by Mr. Childs are "Bouvier's Law Dictionary," "Bouvier's Institutes of American Law," "Sharswood's Blackstone," "Fletcher's Brazil," and "Lossing's Illustrated History of the Civil War."

POWER TO MAKE FRIENDS.

His career has not been all triumph; nor can he, any more than other men, justly claim that his success is due to his unassisted powers. The strongest man needs the aid of his fellows, and he is the strongest man who knows best how to win and deserve that assistance. Such a man as Mr. Childs makes friends. It belongs to his hearty, hopeful, and generous nature to inspire regard in kindred minds; and even minds that have little in common with his own, love to bask in the sunshine of his influence. It so chanced that, among the friends who were drawn to him, early in his Philadelphia career, was the celebrated banker, Mr. Anthony J. Drexel, a gentleman whose name in the metropolis of Pennsylvania is suggestive of everything honorable, liberal, and public spirited. Mr. Childs is proud to acknowledge that, at many a crisis in his life, Mr. Drexel's sympathy and ever-ready help have been a tower of strength to him.

In the long run, however, a man stands upon his own individual merits.
No external aid can long avail if there are radical deficiencies in his own character. It is his own indomitable heart and will that carry every man forward to final victory.

PERSONAL HABITS.

"Meanness," says Mr. Childs, "is not necessary to success in business, but economy is." He has been an economist, not only of money, but of his health, his strength, his vital force, the energy and purity of his brain. It has been his happiness to escape those habits which lower the tone of the bodily health and impair the efficiency of the mind—such as smoking and drinking—which, at this moment, lessen the useful energies of civilized man by, perhaps, one-half! He tells the young men about him that Franklin's rule for success in business is about the best that can be given—simple as it is. It consists of three words: "Temperance, industry, and frugality."

PURCHASE OF THE PUBLIC LEDGER.

Rev. Dr. Prime, editor of New York Observer, says:

In 1864, the Public Ledger, a daily penny paper, rapidly losing money, was for sale, and Mr. Childs bought it.

He converted it at once. This is the point, and for this only is this letter written. Mr. Childs excluded from the paper all details of disgusting crime; all reports of such vice as may not be with propriety read aloud in the family: that poison the minds of young men, inflame the passions and corrupt the heart; all scandal and slang, and that whole class of news which constitutes the staple of many daily papers. The same rule was applied to the advertising columns, and from them was excluded all that, in any shape or form, might be offensive to good morals. The friends of the new publisher predicted an early and total failure, and the more speedy because he doubled the price of the paper and increased the rates of advertising. The effect of this sudden change was at first to sink the sinking concern still lower. A class of readers and advertisers fell off. A less conscientious and a less courageous man would have staggared in the path he had marked.
Not so with Mr. Childs. He employed the best talent, and paid fair wages for good work. He published six days in the week only, and on the seventh day he rested from his labors. His paper and his principles began to obtain recognition in the city. He made it a family journal. It gained the confidence of the best people, who became its daily readers, and therefore it was sought as the best medium of advertising.

PUBLIC LEDGER BUILDING.

The following description of this magnificent building is taken from the Paper World, published at Holyoke, Mas., June 1880.
On the 20th of June, 1867, a new Ledger building was formally opened, which, for magnificence and the completeness of all its appointments, is without a rival among newspaper establishments in the world. It is literally an industrial palace—one of the finest architectural adornments of Philadelphia, and planned throughout with special reference to the health and comfort of those who are employed in it. The warming, lighting and ventilation are as perfect as they can be made, while at frequent intervals throughout the structure are well-appointed bath rooms for every class of employees. The business office is probably the most elegant apartment of the kind on the continent, and the editorial rooms are fitted up in luxurious style, more after the manner of an author's private study than the typical sanctuary.

In this connection we may conveniently speak of Mr. Childs' superb library, "the like of which is not to be found in this country, if in the world." His wide and intimate acquaintance among the literary men of his time, joined to his ample means, have afforded him such opportunities to become possessed of the rarest souvenirs of literature as are seldom enjoyed. In a noble room on the first floor of his elegant Walnut street home are enshrined the choicest of these treasures. It is a place where one who knows "the sure companionship of books" might well love to linger. In the center of the apartment is a massive and well-loaded library table, made of ebony brought from Africa for Mr. Childs by Paul Du Chaillu. By it stands the library chair, also of ebony, and a fac simile of William Beckford's chair at Fonthill. Against the walls, which are further adorned with portraits in oil of George Peabody and Henry W. Longfellow, are richly-wrought ebony book-cases, rising six feet from the floor, and filled with rare volumes, containing autographic inscriptions by their authors. But it is in a beautifully carved cabinet, standing between the two windows, that the most precious of these works are shielded from dust and careless touch. Here we find the original manuscript of a sermon by Cotton Mather, written in a fine neat hand, and dated May 17, 1703. Near it is a copy of the rare Moxon edition of Leigh Hunt's poetical works, containing the autograph inscription, "Charles Dickens, from his constant admirer and obliged friend, Leigh Hunt." With this is a copy of Hood's "Comic Annual" for 1842, with a poetical inscription in Hood's handwriting. Other works, of yet greater interest, are: The original manuscript of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Consular Experiences," written in the author's own beautiful hand throughout; the original manuscript, complete, of Charles Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend," dated "Thursday, Fourth January, 1866," and prefaced by an outline skeleton of the story, such as Dickens always sketched before entering on the final composition; the manuscript, written by herself and adorned with portraits, of Harriet Martineau's "Retrospect of Western Travel." William Cullen Bryant's manuscript of his first book of the "Iliad;" portions of the original manuscript of Mary Cowden Clarke's "Complete Concordance to Shakspeare," and the original manuscript draft of General Grant's address at the opening of the Centennial Exhibition, May 10, 1876. All of these, besides many priceless manuscripts and letters of Moore, Byron, Gray, Burns, Pope, Coleridge, Schiller, Lamb and others, are elegantly bound in folios or quarto, in a manner befitting their inestimable value.
PUBLIC LIFE.

Speaking of Mr. Childs in the use of his wealth, Mr. Frank H. Norton, assistant librarian Astor Library, New York, says:

But there are more ways of dispensing wealth to public advantage than by charity alone. By freely opening his elegant residence in hospitality to visitors from foreign lands, Mr. Childs has doubtless done much for the credit of his country in this particular, while he has brought about associations among distinguished personages which could scarcely fail to inure to the public benefit in some way. Probably no such gathering of distinguished and notable people was ever collected together in the parlors of a private citizen in this country as met by invitation at Mr. Childs' Philadelphia residence on the evening of May 10th, 1876, the day of the opening of the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia. On this occasion there were present President Grant, with his wife; all the members of his Cabinet, with their wives; the Chief Justice and Associated Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and their wives; the Emperor and Empress of Brazil; the Diplomatic and other representatives of Great Britain, France, Spain, Austria, Prussia, Russia, Italy, Belgium, Turkey, Japan, China, and other powers of Europe and Asia: the governors of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland, with their staff officers: leading members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives: Generals Sherman, Sheridan, Hancock, McDowell; Admirals Porter, Rowan, Scott, Lardner, Turner, Jenkins, Alden: Centennial Judges and Commissioners from foreign countries and the United States: famous military and naval officers, eminent judges, leading lawyers, prominent divines, presidents of colleges, authors, journalists, artists: in fact, men famous in every branch of professional and private life. And this instance, except in the remarkable comprehensiveness of its scope, as to the guests, merely illustrates the rule in Mr. Childs' social life. Scarcely a prominent visitor from abroad arrives in this country who is not furnished with letters of introduction to Mr. Childs, and entertained by him. Compare such generous courtesy to the representatives of foreign aristocracy, wealth, and intelligence, with the refinement of delicate appreciation which induced Mr. Childs, during the continuance of the Centennial, to furnish with the means to visit the great fair not only numbers of poor women who would otherwise not have seen it, but also as many as two thousand children who, through Mr. Childs' liberality, were sent happy-hearted to the wonderful Exhibition at Fairmount, and furnished with good dinners while there enjoying the show. Children of the Philadelphia Deaf and Dumb Asylum, the Church Home, and those of other public institutions of that city were thus favored, and in the case of the House of Refuge, it illustrates the peculiar quality of his thoughtfulness that he made a special request that its inmates should be permitted to lay off the uniform, which is their badge, while visiting the Exposition, and wear new suits to be supplied and paid for by him. It is in his peculiar happy faculty for discrimination in the awarding of his benefits and in his methods of distribution, as much as in the lavishness with which he yields up to public and private uses such a large portion of his fortune, that Mr. Childs is specially distinguished. Not an unsuitable illustration of this characteristic, possibly, was his gift of a memorial window in Westminster Abbey in honor of the poets George Herbert and William Cowper. This munificent gift was merely occasioned by the receipt on the part of Mr. Childs of a circular from the committee of English gentlemen who had the matter in hand.

In considering this instance of the refinement of generosity, it should be remembered that it illustrates the patriotism of the man, no less than his liberal impulses. The placing of an elegant stained glass memorial window in Westminster Abbey—the shrine of all the memories that by the English-speaking population of the world are held dearest—was a truly graceful act, associating the American people with their English brethren in a most generous and most fitting tribute to names the world delights to honor.

At the time of the appointment of its official representatives at the Centennial Exposition, the British Government honored Mr. Childs by designating him to the service referred to in the following highly complimentary acknowledgment on the part of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, Lord President of the Council:

[Copy.]

London,
4th January, 1877.

Sir: I have heard with much pleasure from Colonel Sandford of the valuable and important assistance you have rendered me, as one of the Honorary Commissioners for Great Britain, her Colonies and Dependencies, at the Philadelphia International Exhibition of 1876.

It will gratify you to know that Her Majesty’s Government have expressed their highest approval of the administration of the British section, towards the success of which in America you have been good enough so much to contribute.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) RICHMOND AND GORDON.

GEORGE W. CHILDS, Esq.,
Honorary Commissioner for the United Kingdom.

We close our extracts with an item from the pen of Col. J. W. Forney, which furnishes a sort of résumé of the life of Mr. Childs:

No charity appeals to Mr. Childs in vain; no object of patriotism; no great enterprise; no sufferer from misfortune, whether the ex-Confederate or the stricken foreigner. He enjoys the confidence of President Grant, and yet was among the first to send a splendid subscription to the monument to Greeley. He, more than any other, pushed the subscription of over $100,000 for the family of the dead hero, George G. Meade, and yet Alexander H. Stephens of Georgia, has no firmer friend. His list of unpublished and unknown benevolences would give the lie to the story that he craves notoriety. When I carried letters from him to Europe in 1867, his name was a talisman, and it was pleasant to see how noblemen like the Duke of Buckingham honored the endorsement of an American who, thirty years ago, was a poor boy. He made his money himself, not by speculation or office, and got none by inheritance. He coins fortune like a magician, and spends it like a man of heart. He likes society, and lives like a gentleman. He is as temperate as ever Horace Greeley was, and yet he never denies his friends a generous glass of wine. His habits are as simple as Abraham Lincoln's, and yet his residence is a gem bright with exquisite decoration and rich in every variety of art. He gives a Christmas dinner to newsboys and bootblacks, and dines travelling Dukes and Earls with equal ease and familiarity. He never seems to be at work, goes everywhere, sees everybody, helps everybody, and yet his great machine moves like a clock under his constant supervision.

NATHANIEL CHILD AND DESCENDANTS.

The succeeding account is without doubt that of another branch of the descendants of Cephas and Mary Atkinson Child. Though it is equally possible that they may be descendants of a Thomas Child, who at the age of 30, was one of a "number who had taken the oath of allegiance in London, England, and was transported in the 'Speedwell' to Virginia, May 28, 1635." This does not imply anything derogatory even then, it only proves that in leaving England he was no political refugee, as were so many in those troublous days; but we find him possessed of property; that persons were sent him from the mother country, sold for debt as was a custom, into temporary or perpetual servitude. He is also found to be the owner of land and slaves at the Barbadoes, in the parish of St. Michaels. The tradition prevailing in this family that their earliest American ancestor was the personal friend of William Penn, leads to the belief (with other corroborating circumstances,) that they are descendants of Henry Child who leads this line and chapter. We place the Nathaniel Child first known in the same generation as his contemporaries. His descendants add the "s."

[Fourth Generation.]

7534. NATHANIEL CHILD, born about 1745. At the age of twenty three he was married to Tamer Brown, in the year 1768, and resided in Elkton, Cecil county, Maryland. He was a blacksmith and carried on the business of his trade. His death occurred in 1793.

[Fifth Generation.] Children:

[Fifth Generation.]

7535. i. THOMAS CHILDS, eldest son and child of Nathaniel and Tamer Brown Child, b. in Elkton, Cecil county, Md., m. in 1800, Temperance Adkinson Inloes. Resided in Baltimore, Md. He was a master builder, and the first person in that city to invent and manufacture pressed brick for the fronts of houses. He died in Baltimore, in 1837.

[Sixth Generation.] Children:

7541. i. WILLIAM CHILDS, d. at Key West, Florida, in his 22d year, of yellow fever.

7542. ii. GEORGE CHILDS, was lost at sea in his 24th year, having been washed overboard in a storm.

7543. iii. ELIZA CHILDS, d. in her 18th year, of consumption; a girl of rare beauty and great intellectual promise.

7544. iv. TEMPERANCE CHILDS.

7545. v. MARGARET AMANDA CHILDS, emigrated West in 1835, and opened a store in Louisville, Kentucky. She was a woman of great energy of character, and accumulated a fortune. She travelled abroad, and married an English gentleman by the name of Pattison, and lives at this date, 1879, in St. Pierre, Martinique, French West Indies.

7546. vi. HENRY CHILDS, m., no names or dates.

7547. vii. ELLINOR ATKINSON CHILDS, b. Sept. 8, 1819, m. Nov. 20, 1838, Henry L. Clark.

7548. viii. EDWARD CHILDS, settled in the South: killed in the late war.

7549. ix. THOMAS CHILDS, settled in the South: killed in the late war.

7550. x. JOSEPH CHILDS, planter in Arkansas or Texas.

[Sixth Generation.]

7546. vi. DR. HENRY CHILDS, third son and sixth child of Thomas and Temperance Inloes Childs, b. in Baltimore, Md. He learned the trade of boot and shoe making, carried on the trade for several years in Baltimore, then removed to Philadelphia, Pa., where he studied medicine and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania. In that city he married and removed thence to Iowa. He settled on a farm in the valley of the Des Moines river of that State, and cultivated his farm, and practiced his profession. He is very successful as a physician, and has a large practice. He is also a man of great religious influence, being a local Methodist preacher: he fills appointments all over the surrounding country. During the late war, he served as surgeon of the Sixth Iowa Regiment of Volunteers. The name of his wife has not reached us nor any facts of his family.

[Sixth Generation.]

7547. vii. ELLINOR ATKINSON CHILDS, fourth dau. and seventh child of Thomas and Temperance Inloes Childs, b. in Baltimore, Md., Sept. 8, 1819, m. Nov. 20, 1838, Henry L.
Clark, for many years and now secretary of the Wiggins Ferry Company, at St. Louis, Mo. She died at St. Louis, June 23, 1844, a 25.

[Seventh Generation.] Child:

7551. i. James Leslie Clark, b. Nov. 7, 1838, in St. Louis, Mo., unmarried. Resides at DeLassus, St. Francois county, Mo.

[Fifth Generation.]

7536. ii. Nathaniel Childs, second son and child of Nathaniel and Tamer Brown Child, b. in Elkton, Cecil county, Md., 1778. m. 1802, Ann Jessop, who was b. in Baltimore, Maryland, Feb. 10, 1789.

"He learned the trade of a tailor, and came to Baltimore in 1799, with a capital of seventy five cents in his pocket. He worked in the slop shop of Thomas Tennent for several years, and then opened a store of his own, on Fells Point, Baltimore, and engaged in the business of furnishing sailors' clothing for ships going to sea: in this he was successful, and now ventured to marry Miss Ann Jessop, a daughter of William Jessop, a flour merchant of Rowley's Wharf, Baltimore. In this marriage he was greatly blessed in securing a woman of great personal beauty and excellent worth, who entered heartily into all his business and social pursuits, and proved the crowning glory of his life. By her he had fourteen children, who grew up to man and womanhood. In 1811, he purchased a farm in the neighborhood of Gunpowder Forest, in Baltimore county, sixteen miles from the city. At this farm he raised this large family of children, and when they began to marry and move away, most of them to the West, he concluded to sell his farm and follow his children. This he did in 1840, and settled in St. Louis, Mo., where he engaged in business until 1851: he died in that city on the 17th of October, 1851, surrounded by most of his children. His wife, Mrs. Ann Jessop Childs, survived him ten years, dying in August, 1862, in her 74th year.

Mr. Nathaniel Childs was, while resident in Maryland, a slave-holder, owning at one time some seven men and more women. One of these men accompanied him with his command in the war of 1812, and stood with him in the battle of North Point, Sept. 12, 1814. When he died, some time later, he was carefully buried upon the farm at home. The estate is now in possession of strangers, but the grave of the faithful slave is preserved with care. When Mr. Childs removed to St. Louis, Mo., from Maryland, he set all his slaves free. Two accompanied him to the West and one remained with the family until his death. The other made his home with Mr. Nathaniel Child, Jr., to whom he was much attached, and whom he had rescued from drowning when Mr. Nathaniel, Jr., was a child; nor was the affection all on one side, loving though the African heart was. When years and infirmities came, the 'young master' sorrowed, and at his death gave him comfortable burial in the Methodist cemetery in St. Louis, and mourned the true old friend.

Mr. Nathaniel Childs represented his party in the State Legislature three terms, and ever commanded the respect and admiration of his fellow-citizens.”

[Sixth Generation.] Children:

7552. i. Arietta Childs, b. Aug. 1804, m. 1826, Josiah Small.

7576. i. William Ward Childs, b. Dec. 6, 1840. Resides in St. Louis, Mo.

7578. iii. Charles Childs, b. April 24, 1810, m. 1st, in 1837, Eliza J. Stibbs, dau. of Christopher Stibbs of Bath, England; Mrs. E. J. S. Childs d. Aug. 1850, in St. Louis, Mo.; m. 2d, in 1842, Margarette A. Whitlocke of St. Louis. Mrs. M. A. Whitlocke Childs d. Feb. 17, 1880. A woman of rare graces. Upon her union with Mr. Childs, she most graciously and winningly assumed the duties of a second wife and mother. So exceeding was her devotion, and so gentle her authority, that she won the love and esteem of the children, and no home possessed more charming attractiveness. After a time she became deeply impressed with the thought that a more conscious possession of the Holy Spirit in daily, hourly life was possible for all; that some were attaining to this higher inner life, and that she might reach this blessedness. Her attendance at this time was upon the services of the "Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church," Washington, D. C. Very great earnestness attended her prayers, and the result was wonderful: her peace was like a broad, deep river, rich, full, assured: in this she dwelt evermore, until she entered the life of blessedness with her Master.* Mr. Nathaniel Childs, like most residents of Maryland, was at one time a slaveholder. In 1852 he set his slaves free, but felt that some of them were not at all benefitted by the gift of freedom, making their liberty an excess, and shortening their lives thereby. Mr. N. Childs writes us:

"Rev. Mr. Revels, now of Mississippi, the first man of color elected to the United States Senate since the war, was sent from Kentucky to Missouri, by the Bishop of the A. M. E. Church, to take charge of the Green street Methodist congregation of colored people in St. Louis. The law of the State of Missouri, at that time, forbade a man of color to enter the State without giving bonds for his good behaviour. Mr. Revels was arrested. He was a stranger. I went into court, and signed his bond in the penalty of $1,000. Afterward he went South and I never met him until he came to Washington, as U. S. Senator from the State of Mississippi. I attended a reception given him; when he saw me he put his arms around my neck and wept, and then told the company, among whom was Senator Henry Wilson of Mass., the circumstance of his arrest, and my coming to his rescue. This is only one of many incidents in my history with slave life."

Mr. Childs is at present in the office of the second assistant Postmaster General in Washington, D. C.

7639. vi. Mary Sewell.

Rev. James Sewell, second son of Rebecca Childs and Richard Sewell, became a famous Methodist preacher. His services were sought in all parts of the country. He filled pulpits by special transfer for the purpose, in Savannah, Georgia; Charleston, South Carolina; Philadelphia, Pa.; Brooklyn, New York; St. Louis, Missouri, and in all the principal appointments of the Baltimore Conference. He died a few years since, honored and loved by all who knew him.

[Very much which has been promised us in this line has failed to reach us, and after repeated efforts to make the line complete, we are compelled to print without doing so.]

UNATTACHED FAMILIES.

The family here sketched is that of the Rev. John Childs and some of his descendants. It is possible that they belong to the American descendants of Henry Child of Hertfordshire, England. A tradition is recalled by one of the grandchildren, that her Aunt Sarah said “two brothers and two sisters came to America together, one of the sisters bearing the name Cassie;” we have found similar traditions in almost every line, yet facts overthrow them.

7641. “Rev. John Child, was born in Calvert county, Md., but we have not the date of his birth or marriage, or the name of his wife. Very early in life Mr. Childs was licensed by the Methodist Episcopal Church as a “local preacher.” In 1789, he was by the Baltimore Annual Conference appointed upon the Montgomery circuit. His labors in the ministry were interrupted for some years. In 1816, he was again in the active ministry, serving for a year or more in the Lancaster, Baltimore, Montgomery, Great Falls, Carlisle and Chambersburg circuits respectively. In 1823, he was appointed a local preacher once more, but he preferred the other line of service and was again made a circuit minister. In 1829, he received a superannuated relation and retired among his friends in the District of Columbia. Too late, however, to recuperate his wasted energies on earth. He died at the house of Mr. Thos. Jacobs in Alexandria, D. C., expressing his entire confidence in God his Saviour."

Mr. Childs was the owner at one time of a number of slaves, but at the age of twenty-one he set them all free and gave to each several acres of land.

[Of his family we can give but two children, though we understand there were more]

[Seventh Generation] Children:

7642. i. SARAH A. CHILDS, m. Mr. Jacobs of Langley, Fairfax county, Va.

7913. v. Mary M. Barnes, b. June 23, 1866.
7914. vi. Fannie Barnes, b. May 25, 1869.

The succeeding record is furnished by George L. Child of Troy, N. Y. We are not able to connect the family with its early ancestry; it is no doubt of either the line of Benjamin Child of Roxbury, through some of the Connecticut descendants, or that of Jeremiah Child of Swansea, through some of the Rhode Island families.

7915. Abel Child, thought to have been born in New York City between 1790 and 1800. Removed early to Troy, N. Y., where he was for many years extensively engaged in the coffee trade; in this business he was succeeded by his son. If there were other children we do not learn of them.

[Seventh Generation.] Child:
7916. i. Austin Child, b. in New York City, Aug. 10, 1822, m. 1st, Eliza Ann Lent of Troy, N. Y.; m. 2d, Mary Elizabeth Lawton of Stuyvesant Falls. Resided at Green Island, Troy, N. Y., where he died Jan. 7, 1873.

[Eighth Generation.] Children:
7917. i. Austin Child, Jr., d. young.
7918. ii. Charlotte Louisa Child, b. about 1845, m. J. Harney.
UNATTACHED FAMILIES.

7919. iii. Alice Emma Child, b. 1852, d. aged 6 years.

[Eighth Generation.]

7918. ii. Charlotte Louisa Child, eldest dau. of Austin and Eliza Ann Lent Child, b. in Troy, about 1845, m. J. Harvey, carriage manufacturer in Sandy Hill, N. Y.

[Ninth Generation.]

Child:
7921. i. Mary Harney, b. Oct. 26, 1876.

There is little doubt this line belongs to Jeremiah Child of Swansea, a most numerous family of whom we have but partial reports.

[Eighth Generation.]

Children:
7923. i. Joseph Child, b. 1834, or '35, m. Lois Tripp.
7925. iii. William R. Child, b. Sept. 28, 1843, m. Aug. 22, 1867, Sarah Hampson, dau. of Thomas Hampson. Mr. Child is a hotel keeper at Cohoes, N. Y.

7958. ii. Lottie White.
7959. iii. Jennie White.
7960. iv. Carrie White.
7961. v. Gertie White.

[Eighth Generation.]

Mr. Lytle was a young man of excellent qualities of heart and mind. He was early left an orphan and reared under the care of a most estimable aunt, Miss Jane Lytle, whose care for him and an elder brother, most tenderly supplied the place of a mother. At the time of his death he was employed as clerk in a wholesale dry-goods establishment in Troy, N. Y., and held in high esteem for his fidelity and efficiency. He was a consistent and devoted member of Christ's Episcopal Church, Troy, N. Y.

[Ninth Generation.] Children:
7964. iii. Eugene Lytle, b. June 8, 1878.

[Eighth Generation.] Children:
7968. iv. Walter Abner Childs, b. May 27, 1864; lives in N. Adams.
7972. JONATHAN WILLARD CHILDS, b. about 1798, probably in Cheshire, Mass. He was an only son, but of his parentage we have no report from his son, W. A. Child. Mr. Child married about 1819, Susan Aylesworth, daughter of Warner Aylesworth of Adams, Mass.

[--- Generation.] Children:

7973. i. ZILPHA M. CHILDS, b. about 1820.

7974. ii. WARNER A. CHILDS, b. 1823, m. Meth. 24, 1845, Hannah Taft of Troy, N. Y. Mr. Child has been engaged in mercantile affairs a portion of his life; is now a man of leisure in easy circumstances. Resides in North Adams, Mass.

There were two other children unchristened.

The accompanying brief record is sent us by Dr. William R. Childs, for many years a resident of Deposit, N. Y.

“WILLIAM RODERICK CHILDS, of Philadelphia, Pa., my father, was a sea captain, he was a great, good and worthy man. He married a daughter of Michael and Sarah Brade of Philadelphia, Pa. My father was drowned on a return voyage from the West Indies, whence he was bringing a cargo of oranges. My mother afterward married Dea. William Hawley of Deposit, N. Y., and had one son, Ezra Sherman Hawley, who married and had several children; he is a merchant of the firm of Hawley, Burk & Co., of Nebraska. Mrs. Hawley died some years since.

[Children of Capt. W. R. Childs:]

i. WILLIAM RODERICK CHILDS, married but had no children. Has studied both the medical and legal professions.

ii. THEODORE D. CHILDS, married.

iii. ANGELINE H. CHILDS, married Henry Freeman, has three children, the eldest daughter married Mr. Price. Mr. Freeman was a railway agent, and was killed by some accident on the railway at Deposit, N. Y.

ii Theodore D. Childs, married. He is a druggist and grocer; a well educated and worthy man; has two sons living. He resides in Walton, Delaware county, N. Y.

i. WILLIAM CHILDS, resides in Wyoming Territory.

ii. JAMES CHILDS, married and has a family; resides Wyoming Territory.”
The succeeding record, a correction and filling out of the record found on page 326, has come to us just as we supposed we had printed our last records for the body of the work. As we found we could supplement it as we had done one other tardily received report, we concluded to do so instead of placing it in the appendix.

[Sixth Generation.]

2379. iii. Cyril Child, eldest son of William and Mary Heaton Child, b. in Thetford, Vt., April 20, 1783, m. Dec. 23, 1807, Mary Collins, she was b. REV. J. ASPENWALL HODGE, D. D.

(See page 265.)

At the time of printing the record of Charlotte G. Morse, dau. of Richard Cary and Louisa Davis Morse, who married Rev. J. Aspenwall Hodge, D. D., we lacked the dates of the birth of her children, and were ignorant of the fact that her husband was a clergyman. For this reason the names of the children are here repeated. We also correct the date of Mrs. Hodge's birth and give the date of her marriage, which is omitted in the former record—her birth occurring May 28, 1833, and her marriage May 14, 1857. Rev. Dr. Hodge is pastor of the Presbyterian church and society in Hartford, Ct., and a member of the Presbytery of New York.

Children:

1703. i. JAMES BAYARD HODGE, b. July 19, 1859, d. Sept. 21, 1860.

POTTSTOWN PA. BRANCH.

THOMAS AND MARY CHILD. This family, being unable to trace their line beyond Thomas Child, the father of William Child, of Pottstown, Pa., we are left in doubt as to their paternity. Similarity of name and proximity of residence point to the Thomas Child mentioned on page 757, who was a property-holder in Virginia in the early part of the seventeenth century; or, the family may belong to that recorded on pages 766-7, the tradition of whose paternity varies but little from that handed down by this and other lines. Or, again, they may be descendants of Cephas Child, page 734, the posterity of several of his large family not having been found in our researches.

Mr. William Child, of Marietta, Pa., who has for many years been connected with the Auditor's office, in Washington, D. C., sends the following account of Thomas Child, the earliest ancestor of whom he has any knowledge; it reached us after many of the copies were bound and sent out. He says: "I understand that Thomas Child was one of three brothers, who came to this country and settled in Pottstown, Pa. My father, William Child, was the son of Thomas and Mary Child, b. Jan. 2, 1795, in Pottstown, Pa. He married Mary Williams, daughter of Joshua and Sarah Williams, b. Sept. 3, 1783. She died in Marietta, Pa., Aug. 25, 1819; he died Oct. 24, 1873.

Children:

ii. Thomas Child, b. in Marietta, Pa., Nov. 23, 1809; m. 1st, Susan V. Gratiot, of Gratiot's Grove, Wis. She d. 1845. He m. 2d, Mrs. May Ann Neal, of Baltimore, Md. He d. Nov. 12, 1873. They had two children, son and daughter: Willie II., b. 1843; Mary, b. 1850, died young. The son was killed by a sharp shooter during the Rebellion, in front of Petersburg, Va. He was a Lieutenant in the forty-fifth Regt. Penn. Vol., and had served over three years. Was twenty-one years old at the time of his death.

iii. William Child Jr., b. in Marietta, Pa., Mar. 6, 1812; m. June 4, 1833, Susan Kepler.

APPENDICES.

CAPT. WILLARD CHILD. [See page 178.]

The following obituary of Capt. W. Child was found by his daughter, Mrs. C. C. May, after the printing of his family record in the body of the work, and is prefaced by a brief note of the editor of the Boston paper in which it was published at the time of his decease:

'The subject of the following obituary notice has been for many years well known to many of our readers. The old patriot having fought a good fight as a soldier of his country and as a christian, died full of years on the spot of his birth. He was on Dorchester Heights the morning the British forces evacuated Boston. From those heights, where he had worked all night long throwing up embankments, he saw the British fleet, as the sun rose in the morning, slowly sailing out of Boston harbor. Capt. Child was also with the army of the North at the surrender of Burgoyne.'—Ed. Cour.

Died in Woodstock, Ct., on the 13th inst. (Nov. 1844) Mr. Willard Child, father of Rev. Willard Child of Norwich, Ct., aged 86 years.

The following are extracts from the sermon preached at his funeral:

'The subject of these solemnities was a christian in early life. He made a public profession of religion, and a long subsequent christian career has proved that he was in reality what he professed to be. He has been ever since a useful and consistent member of the Christian Church, and by his labors, his prayers and benefactions, and examples, has aided to sustain and carry forward the institutions of religion. Even in his last days his Church, and the whole Church of Christ, were the objects of his interest, love and prayers. He said to me a few days since, 'O, there is not a day passes but I pray for the Church.' He went down to the tomb like a shock of corn in its season—ripe in years, ripe for heaven—like a sun that sets behind the horizon without a cloud. He died the death of the righteous, and his last end was like his. On the morning of his death, in answer to several inquiries, he said: 'I feel no alarm in view of death; my hope rests on Jesus—it enters into that within the veil'; 'I feel that I love the Saviour more than any thing else.' There was no rapture, no triumph, but settled, calm. chr.stian confidence. His death was like his life, especially like his closing weeks, serene and peaceful. In the midst of closest earthly friends, who affectionately ministered to his latest wants, he peacefully breathed his last. There are but few, comparatively, who leave behind them at their death so numerous an offspring as he has left. Of nine children who reached maturity, eight still survive. All these are members of the Christian Church. One (Rev. Willard Child) is a minister of the gospel, of whose success and usefulness it does not become me here to speak. The number of his grandchildren are seventy-seven, about sixty of whom are living. The number of great-grandchildren is about forty, and, if I am rightly informed, the far-greater proportion of these are members of the Christian Communion; so that he could say in his last hour, with Simeon of old, 'Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.' He expected to meet them in heaven, to present them to his Master, to hear their voices in the choir of the redeemed, and to dwell with them forever where no tie is sundered and no farewell tear is shed.' Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.'

—Com.
HON. CALVIN GODDARD CHILD. [See page 141.]

At the commencement of the preparation of this volume, more than three years since, Hon. Calvin G. Child was among the earliest to express himself in favor of the enterprise, and up to the time of his decease, looked forward with much interest to its completion. In the Providence of God he has been called to enter upon new scenes where his brilliant intellect and benevolent heart find wider scope in a higher sphere of activities. In a letter I received from one of his daughters, in response to one sent her mother on the occasion of his death, she writes: “We are very grateful for your sympathy in our great sorrow, and shall be much pleased to have you insert the notice of his death in the Genealogy, in which my father was much interested.” His service to his country for many years has been one of honor and usefulness. If pride of birth is ever justifiable, Mr. Child had an indisputable right to cherish such distinction. His paternal ancestors for generations bore the stamp of men of robust, physical powers with decidedly strong intellectual characteristics; men of positive opinions, men of intelligence and unquestioned executive abilities. From his maternal ancestry also he inherited largely advantages in birth, culture and position, the Goddards, the Hales and the Bellarmys, who have adorned the bar, the pulpit, the judicial bench and the halls of legislation, head the line, to be connected with whom is an honor and a benediction. Such have been the antecedents of Hon. Calvin Goddard Child.

The esteem in which he was held by his fellow citizens may be gathered from utterances of the public press on the occasion of his death. The New York Times, Sept. 29, 1880, says:

“The Hon. Calvin Goddard Child, United States District Attorney for Connecticut, died yesterday morning at his home in Stamford, in the forty-seventh year of his age. Mr. Child was born at Norwich, Conn., and came of a family whose members attained eminent positions in public and social life in various parts of Northern New England. Prominent among his ancestors was the Hon. Calvin Goddard, whose name he bore. Shortly after leaving Yale College as one of the graduating class of 1855, Mr. Child received the appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel on the staff of Gov. Buckingham, whose private secretary he was during the rebellion. About ten years ago he was appointed United States District Attorney for Connecticut, an office in which he was thrice confirmed as his own successor, and in which he earned the entire confidence of the Judiciary and the Bar of his native State. The vigilance with which he guarded the interests of the Government did not prevent him from discharging with rare fidelity, duties devolving upon him as counsel for the New York and the New Haven Railroad Company, and other clients. His standing as a lawyer was very high, and his perfect familiarity with legal decisions relating to railroads rendered him a dangerous adversary in the trial suits instituted in the higher courts of this State, as well as at the Bar of Connecticut. In private life Mr. Child was a gentleman whose striking amiability and gentleness attracted many friends, who in common with the members of the profession which he adorned, will deeply feel his loss. His old college mates, by whom he was particularly beloved, on hearing the news of his illness, a few weeks since, suspended the yearly festivities of their class and sent him a telegraphic message of sympathy, and expressed their regret that his sickness had prevented him from attending their twenty-fifth anniversary. Mr. Child was married to Kate, daughter of Jonathan Godfrey, of Southport, Conn. His funeral will take place at 2 p. m. to-morrow from St. John’s Episcopal Church of Stamford, and the interment will be at Southport.”

Of his efficiency and trustworthiness as a legal adviser, the New York Tribune says:
He has been counsel for the New York and New Haven Railroad Company for the past fifteen years, and had acted as attorney for other corporations in suits of importance. He was very careful and painstaking in the preparation of his cases, and showed great skill and judgment in their trial. As an officer of the Government, he was zealous and faithful in the discharge of his trust; as a lawyer, he was devoted to the interests of his client; and as a citizen he commanded the respect and esteem of all who knew him. Among his more intimate friends he was regarded with feelings of affection for his geniality of manner and kindness of heart, as well as for his unvarying courtesy and good nature.

The Stamford Herald says:

"The Hon. Calvin G. Child, one of Stamford's most valued and beloved citizens, is dead. His health during the last two years has been far from good. A slight stroke of apoplexy last March caused his friends great alarm, and was the first premonition of the disease which during the last month developed into softening of the brain, from which he died about 5 o'clock yesterday morning.

Calvin Goddard Child, son of Asa Child, a distinguished member of the Connecticut Bar, and grandson of Judge Calvin Goddard, one of Connecticut's most distinguished jurists, was born at Norwich, Conn., April 6, 1831. He was graduated at Yale College in the class of 1855, pursued his legal studies at the Harvard Law School, was admitted to the bar at Boston in February, 1858, and at once commenced the practice of law in Norwich, where he remained until 1864. During his residence in Norwich he was for a time Judge of the City Court in that city, and also held the office of executive secretary to Governor Buckingham, a position which at that time, during the thick of the rebellion, was peculiarly onerous and exacting, and the duties of which he discharged with great fidelity and efficiency. Later he was appointed an aid on the staff of Governor Buckingham with the rank of Colonel. In 1864, he removed to Southport, practicing law in New York City in partnership with Hon. Thomas E. Stewart until 1867, when he removed to Stamford, and with Hon. Joshua B. Ferris formed the firm of Ferris & Child, and has since resided in this place.

He was appointed United States District Attorney for Connecticut by President Grant in February, 1870, a position which he held at the time of his death, his third term expiring in 1882. During his occupancy of this office the business pertaining to it has been so systematized, and conducted with such efficiency and at the same time so little friction, that the District of Connecticut has come to be regarded as a model one at Washington. For the last twelve years Mr. Child had been of counsel to the New York and New Haven Railroad, conducting all its litigation in Fairfield county and the city of New York. He achieved marked success in this branch of his practice and was frequently retained by and against other corporations.

He had also a large general practice, and was universally acknowledged to stand in the front rank of his profession in this State. His clients found in him not only a faithful and judicious counsellor, but an earnest friend as well, and while no one could be more prompt and zealous in defending their strict legal rights against wrongful encroachment, he was continually striving to settle all controversies if possible by amicable adjustment on broad equitable principles. While lacking in none of the departments of his profession, he particularly excelled as an advocate, in the trial and presentation of causes either to court or jury, and his public speaking, whether forensic or otherwise, was justly admired for its chaste and elegant English, as well as its force and directness.

During his residence in Stamford, Mr. Child identified himself with the interests of the town, and actively engaged in many projects for the advancement of its material and social interests. At the time of his death he was a director of the Stamford Water Company and of the Telephone Company, a trustee of the Ferguson Library and a member of the vestry of St. John's Church. He was elected by the last Diocesan Convention a delegate to the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, soon to hold its session in New York City.
Mr. Child was a man of wide reputation and had a large circle of acquaintanceship throughout the country, and was universally respected and esteemed. He was one whom to know was an honor and a pleasure, whom to know well was a blessing.

He was married in September, 1858, to Miss Catharine Godfrey, daughter of Capt. Jonathan Godfrey of Southport, who survives him, together with four children."

Of the estimate of his influence as a Christian man, we quote some extracts from an article by his pastor, as found in the Churchman:

"He was also a devout and earnest Christian, a cultivated scholar and an exact thinker. The appreciation of the rector and vestry of his own parish was shared by the Bishop and Convention of the Diocese of Connecticut; and few men have in so short a public church life acquired so much consideration and influence in a body not much given to recognize new influences. He had recently been placed on the delegation to the General Convention, and the conscientious attention which his trained legal mind had already given to the constitution and law of the church and to the special subjects which are now up for consideration, especially the tenure of church property gave great promise of usefulness as a member of that body."

We append to the notice of Hon. C. G. Child a correct list of his children by some accident not complete as given on page 142.

HORATIO H. CHILD. [See page 231.]

At Leonardsville, Madison county, N. Y., on the 6th Dec. 1880, died Mr. H. H. Child; suddenly called yet ready found to exchange time for eternity. Engaged in business at the time of his decease, full of cheerful activity, he daily awaited the summons, while his friends could not realize the possibility. Every detail of his affairs was in complete order, his very account books revealing his constant vigilance. Stricken with pain by the wayside, a good Samaritan took him into his house, and administered unto him, but our Lord bade him hence and he went willingly. The spiritual life had been manifestly growing, purifying and sweetening. A gracious yielding on many points not vital, but once felt by him to be tenaciously held and contended for, evidenced the attaining of the Christlikeness; yet no one could be farther removed from morbidness. Seven weeks previous to the day of his burial he attended the marriage of his son, Rev. F. S. Child, an event so wholly satisfactory to him, that he felt he could utter his nunc dimittis with a full and ready heart. One half the small family are on the farther shore awaiting those who still labor and wait.

ELISHA CHILD. [See page 229.]

His death occurred subsequent to the printing of his family record. The following extract is from an obituary notice published in the Putnam Patriot, Ct:

As a young man Mr. Child had good principles and steady habits. He retained this character throughout his life. He was inflexible wherever principles were at stake. Conscientious in all matters, he was particularly so in all that seemed to him duty. He enjoyed the confidence of men to an unusual degree. A few weeks before his death he was elected to the State Legislature and was especially pleased with this mark of the esteem and confidence of his fellow townsmen. The firmness of his principles is shown by the fact that for more than forty years he was a staunch believer in total abstinence, and deeply interested in all efforts to promote the cause. Genial and kind hearted by nature Mr. Child enjoyed meetings for social intercourse, and his pleasant smile and the kindly vein of humor in his nature made him a welcome member of such gatherings. The freshness of his feelings was shown by his interest in the young people, and their high regard for him. But the great charm of the man lay in the simple christian character which surrounded him as an atmosphere. His faith was strong, but simple as that of a child, and it had been chastened and deepened by the many trials and sorrows of his life. He had many christian graces but the crown of them all was his deep humility. For, while to others he seemed to grow riper and riper, he seemed to himself to become more conscious of his needs as a sinner, and so he cast himself entirely upon the grace of God in Jesus Christ. For over forty-two years he was a member of the Congregational church in North Woodstock, and at his death, as for many previous years, held the office of deacon. Liberal, according to his means, in maintaining public worship; a constant and active attendant at the weekly prayer meeting; above all, confessedly sincere and exemplary in his christian walk, he was indeed a "pillar" of the church. He died Dec. 15, 1880, aged 68 years, 6 months. Funeral services were held in the church at North Woodstock, on the Sunday afternoon following his death, and the large attendance drawn from all parts of the town showed how wide and deep was the appreciation of those that knew his life.

The following brief obituary is given for several reasons. The residence of Mr. Child was in the county in England from which most of the emigrant ancestors are supposed to have come. The Baldwins were of kindred blood to the Child family, which led to the assumption on the part of the late baronet of their arms and name; the arms being the same given in this book. The death occurring as we are upon this work, we think it fitting to place it here, for the association of Mr. Child with men of note of his time in letters and statesmanship.

WILLIAM LACON CHILDE, M. P.

One of the oldest ex-members of the British Parliament, Mr William Lacon Childe, of Kinlet Hall, Shropshire, and of Kyre, Worcestershire, who in three weeks more would have attained the age of ninety-five, died in England on the 14th inst. He was the only son of the late Mr. William Baldwin (who assumed the surname and arms of Childe only), by his marriage with Annabella, second daughter of Sir Charlton Leighton, of Loton Park, Shropshire, and was born on the 3d of January, 1786. He was educated at Harrow, where he was school fellow of the late Lord Palmerston, Sir Robert Peel, Lord Byron and the late Duke of Sutherland. He afterward entered Christ Church, Oxford. He sat in the House of Commons in the conservative interest, as member for Wenlock, in the first Parliament of George IV. He moved the address in reply to the King's speech in February, 1823. Mr. Childe was a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for the counties of Worcester and Salop, and served as high sheriff of the latter county in 1859. He was also a magistrate for the county of Hereford. He married in 1807 Harriet, second daughter of the late Mr. William Chudde, of Orelton, Shropshire, by whom he has left a family. He is succeeded in his estates by his eldest son and heir, Mr. William Lacon Childe, who was born in 1816, and married in 1839 Barbara, daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Giffard, of Chillington, Staffordshire.—Herald, Dec. 26, 1880.

APPENDIX II.—SKETCHES.

When preparing the record of the children of Hon. John Child, (see page 583) of Weybridge, Vt., we were informed that Mrs. Harriet H. Child Colby, (see page 586) the only surviving daughter, and her husband, Hon. C. C. Colby, were gifted, cultured people, and we awaited so long as we could the facts herewith given; by some unfortuitous circumstances they were in season only for the appendix:*

"Mrs. H. H. Child Colby was educated at the Fort Edward Institute, N. Y., where she graduated with the highest honors Nov. 19, 1856. In 1857 she accepted the position of preceptress of the Stanstead, P. Q., Female Seminary, and resigned the following year to become the wife of Charles Carroll Colby, then a rising young lawyer of Stanstead. During her school days she developed a poetic talent, which won high encomiums, and some of her published poems, written at that time, are pronounced by critics 'very gems.' After marriage the cares and duties of a wife and mother with her had higher claims, and the exercise of this talent was discontinued. Endowed with refined sensibility, and superior intelligence, from extensive and varied reading, brilliant conversational powers and the most amiable disposition, combined with high moral attributes, Mrs. Colby is truly fitted to adorn the highest social circles. The religious sympathies of Mr. and Mrs. Colby are with the Wesleyan Methodists, having united with that church soon after their marriage."

A writer in the Richmond Guardian, P. Q., of January 21, 1881, under the head of "Our Leaders." "The Eastern Township's Group," speaks of Mr. Colby as follows:

"Charles Carroll Colby, M. P. for Stanstead, the senior of the group, who was first returned to Parliament in 1867. A member of the House for so many years his complete recognition as a leader in debate, there, has been of comparatively recent date, and he has grown slowly and naturally into the position he now occupies as one of the acknowledged leaders in debate, and an authority on all topics which pertain to political economy. Mr. Colby is an extremely modest man, and has not been a frequent speaker. The political economists of the House are few in number:—Sirs R Cartwright, and Tilley, Messrs. Mackenzie, T. White, Charlton McCarthy, Mills, and Colby are the prominent representatives of the school. Alike, yet not akin: differing from each other in the breadth and sympathies yet apt scholars in the domain of study they have made their own. As a rule this school of politicians are zealous in their conceits, passionately wedded to abstractions and tyrannical in their insistence upon the adaptability of their cherished theories to all conceivable conditions of society, and admitting of no exceptions. It is therefore refreshing to be able to lay one's hand upon a doctrinaire of the sect who can intelligently and effectively apply the principles of political economy in their essence, yet in that modified form called for by an exceptional condition of national life, without doing violence to those axiomatic truths which it is the purpose and function of that, by no means exact science to inculcate. Mr. Colby is preeminently a political economist of this type.

There is a saying of the poet Pope: "One science only will one genius fit," and this learned essayist, furthermore, says, that not only is the genius of any particular individual "limited to particular arts," but that his knowledge is also "confined to single parts of the particular art" in which he may be proficient. This is emphatically true of the political economist. Mr. Colby is an exceptional instance of one of the school, who while grasping the essential principles is able to apply them to special and exceptional circumstances, extending to the minutest detail without in the slightest way compromising admitted truths of the science. There is moreover, in his speeches an invigorating sense of honesty, of outspokenness, and of candor; and they afford evidence of extensive erudition and accurate knowledge: uniting happily great reading with that solid judgment and discrimination which turns the learning of others to liberal account without the least compromise of their freedom of thought: and his language is always pure, melodious, and nervous. He gives his opinions free vent and is not afraid of his convictions. His sentences all abound with the fervor and fullness of feeling which constitutes the highest form of oratory; and on this account he is always listened to with pleasure and advantage, and will hold the attention of a wearied and listless auditory when an impassioned and fervid speaker would fail to secure a hearing. He is not an impassioned speaker, nor imaginative; rarely poetical, and never pathetic. Yet he is an orator. He speaks with an ease and readiness which suggest an accurate and comprehensive acquaintance with his subject. He is not apt with metaphor but is always happy with his illustrations and quotations, though he rarely uses them; and he never fails to carry conviction.

Mr. Colby is a close student. If you are in search of him during a sitting of the House, you will find him in the Library looking up the facts for a meditated speech. When he is prepared he will speak: for rather than fail to do full justice to his theme he will forego the contemplated deliverance: he will have it all at his fingers' ends, and will be greedily listened to as well by "the other side of the House" as his own. A reply to him is very rarely attempted. He always has something new to say, and that something is true and terse; he invariably presents his case with modesty, yet, withal, with that confidence and symmetry of proportions which characterizes the master-hand of an expert. He is a logical debater and travels closely in company with his subject; observing an order of arrangement which, like the scale in a musical gamut, leads up evenly and uniformly to the predicated conclusion. He is moreover, a moderate man—never overdoing himself, or overreaching his theme, and is one of the most amiable of disputants. Though he has a great command of language, and that keen perception which enables the logical mind to penetrate a sophistry, he never belittles an opponent or exults in the weakness of his argument. He possesses in a remarkable degree the happy faculty of being able to make his most subtle ideas perfectly plain to others by the use of simple, yet striking language. When he has done speaking it is felt that the argument is complete: no loopholes are left, no patching up necessary; one feels that a master has spoken, that the deliverance is complete,—every part of it jointed together with the mathematical exactness of a mosaic panel.

It is needless to say that Mr. Colby is a conservative; but he is by no means a strong party man. When principles divide men into groups he is a tower of strength in the ranks of those who are in sympathy with him, but where principles are absent personal likings nor the traditions of association will secure his co-operation. Like the great Robert Hall who "would not cross the street to make a Baptist, but would go a long way to make a Christian." Mr. Colby would go much "out of his way" to make a patriot, but would not turn over his hand to make a conservative. He is also a consistent politician. In days like the present, which witness such startling changes in the actions and votes of whole parties, as well as in the opinions of individuals, consistency of conduct and fidelity of principle are qualities which claim attention by their very rarity, and impress the student of the history of our times with feelings of esteem and confidence. Press and people, alike, whatever be their differences in political opinion, agree with remarkable unanimity in their estimate of the honorable members for Stanstead. Partisanship will frequently discover and proclaim blemishes in an opponent, but when, as in Mr. Colby's case these are spoken of accompanied by expressions of good will and respect, a far more valuable compliment is paid than would be any ready tribute from a friendly admirer. That portion of the press which delights to direct its shafts against the faults—often more imagined than real—of our public men, has spared Mr. Colby, and the townships have just reason to pride themselves on having,—in the eyes of his political adversaries—at least one public man who is regarded as being, like Cesar's wife, "above suspicion."

Mr. Colby is by profession a lawyer. He was born at Derby, Vt., in 1827. His father, Dr. Colby, represented Stanstead for many years in the old Parliament, before the Union of 1841. He is a graduate of Dartmouth College, N. H., and is known to be an accomplished scholar. He has been twice returned by acclamation, but at the last General Election was forced to go through the ordeal of a contest, the "frivolous and vexations" character of which was shown by the enormous majority which was rolled up in his favor by his enthusiastic constituents.

Miss Abby Lemira Colby, eldest daughter of Charles C. and Harriet (Child) Colby, was educated at Stanstead Female College, piano-forte music being made a specialty, in which she became very proficient. Her school days have also been supplemented with the advantages of American and foreign travel. Her fine intellectual culture, captivating manners, with much beauty of person, and amiable traits of character, renders her at once the favorite of the social circle and an ornament to the best society.

Miss Jessie Maud Colby, second daughter of Charles C. and Harriet (Child) Colby, received her education at Stanstead Female College, where she graduated with the highest honors in the class of 1878, receiving at that time a special degree in music. Yet the prominent feature in her college life was the high degree of attainment made in not a few but all the branches of the college course. This symmetry of development in intellectual culture finds also in her its counterpart in the development of those high moral qualities, which combined with other graces make the refined and noble woman.

Daniel Wright Child, third son of John and Abigail Wright Child, received an academical education at the Vergennes, Vt., Grammar School, and Troy Conference Academy. Upon attaining his majority, he engaged in general farming, and specially in breeding and dealing in Spanish merino sheep, with marked financial success. In 1867, he, in company with his brother, Col. A. J. Child, located in Independence, Missouri, making as before the sheep business a specialty, with the addition of breeding fine blooded horses. September 13th, 1870, he was united in marriage with Nevada, eldest daughter of G. Chace of Independence, Mo.

Mrs Nevada Chace Child was born in Warren county, Ill., Sept. 13th, 1850. She received her education at Vinton, Burton county, lowa. In 1866, Mr. Chace and family settled in Independence, Mo., and the two years preceding her marriage was occupied in teaching in the graded school of that place. In the summer of 1872, D. W. Child and wife removed to Greenhorn near Pueblo, Colorado, making the journey across the plains, overland, with a large herd of sheep to stock his ranch. In 1873, the stock of sheep was largely augmented by thorough bred Spanish merinos from Vermont. But the lawless and desperate cattle ranchmen of the territory looked with a jealous eye upon what they considered the encroachments of the sheepmen, and speedily organized for their extermination. As the leader in maintaining the rights of the sheepmen, D. W. Child stood firm and unflinching, and the concentrated ire of the desperadoes was launched on his devoted head. During a night’s absence from home the cowardly miscreants made a descent on his corral and butchered between five and six thousand dollars worth of his finest sheep. This outrage of course reacted upon the perpetrators, large rewards were offered by the Governor and others for their apprehension, and they were obliged to leave the country, and the sheepmen were left in the quiet enjoyment of their rights. D. W. Child is an energetic, thorough going business man, and succeeds in what he undertakes. The breeding of fine horses (in connection with sheep farming) and more recently mining, have received considerable attention.

The religious sympathies of Mr. and Mrs. Child are with the Baptist denomination (not close communion), with which church they united several years since. Being well qualified by education and culture, and having seen and experienced much of frontier life, they have contributed numerous interesting sketches and adventures to the New York Tribune, Journal of Agriculture, and Colorado Farmer. Many of the “Colorado articles” which have appeared in those prints, have been contributed by them. Republican in politics, they have done their full share in helping to build up the “Centennial State.”

THE LOWRIE FAMILY.

The original name was Lawrie or Laurie, but was changed after the family came to America to Lowrie, as it was commonly pronounced. In the old family Bible, the possession of the late Chief Justice Lowrie there is a record running through five generations, from which we quote, 1st, Joseph Lowrie and Jane McGhie married April 1, 1748; 2d, John Lowrie, eldest son of Joseph and Jane Lowrie, born July 9, 1749, married Jan. 29, 1772, Catherine Cameron; 3d, Mathew Bonsall Lowrie, eldest son of John and Catherine C. Lowrie, born May 12, 1778, married May 8, 1805, Sarah Anderson; 4th, Jane Bailey Lowrie, eldest daughter of Mathew B. and Sarah A. Lowrie, born Feb. 14, 1806, married Jan. 5, 1829, Harvey Childs of Pittsburgh, Pa. We find also that Walter Lowrie, second son of John and Catherine C. Lowrie, born Dec. 10, 1784, married 1833, Mary K. Childs, daughter of Joshua and Susan King Childs of Springfield, Mass.

John Lowrie and Catherine Cameron were married by Rev. Mr. McCallan of Arduarumhechan; Catherine was of the Highland clan Cameron. The Lowries were Lowlanders. For many years John resided in Edinburgh, and there several of his children were born. In 1783, he emigrated to America, locating first in Huntingdon county, Pa., but afterwards moved to Butler county where he remained. Despite the difficulties inseparable from rural life, he secured his children an education, the tastes inherited by his posterity leading them into professional life. Mr. Lowrie was known in his new home as a man of ability, energy and integrity. He died Aug. 10, 1840, aged 91.

Hon. M. B. Lowrie, son of John and Catherine Cameron Lowrie, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, May 12, 1778, and came to America with his parents in 1793. Married May 8, 1805, Miss Sarah Anderson, eldest daughter of James and Jane Bailey Anderson. Mr. Anderson was born in Cumberland county, Pa., in 1760, married Miss Jane Bailey in 1786.

Mr. M. B. Lowrie was a student at the University of Edinburgh, when the removal of the family to America interrupted his studies. He continued his education, however, even in the classical branches, and qualified himself to become a successful teacher. In 1817, he removed with his wife and eldest child, Miss Jane B. Lowrie, to Pittsburgh, Pa. On the way thither, in Armstrong county, his son, Walter Hoge Lowrie, was born. After reaching Pittsburgh, Mr. Lowrie established a school which he continued for several years, gaining the respect of the community for his character, education and probity. Accordingly, in 1816, when the city of Pittsburgh was chartered, he was one of the first twelve aldermen appointed by Governor Simon Snyder from among the prominent citizens, who were commissioned...

for life, and from among whom the mayors of the city were to be selected by the action of the city councils. In 1830, Mr. M. B. Lowrie was thus chosen mayor. Hon. M. B. Lowrie died in Pittsburgh, July 28, 1850, from a sudden attack of cholera morbus caused by returning to the city in the heat of summer. Four sons attained manhood, Hon. Walter H. Lowrie, Dr. Jas. A. Lowrie, Rev. Jno. M. Lowrie, D. D., and Joseph W. Lowrie.

Chief Justice Walter Hoge Lowrie, LL. D., eldest son of Hon. Mathew B. and Jane Bailey Lowrie, born in Armstrong county, Pa., March 31, 1807; grew to manhood in Pittsburgh, here he graduated from the Western University, June, 1826. He began at once the study of the law in the offices of Hon. Chas. Shaler and Hon. Walter Forward, was admitted to the bar Aug. 4, 1829. For seventeen years he devoted himself assiduously to his profession. August 29, 1846, he was appointed by Gov- ernor Shunk president judge of the District Court of Allegheny county; he held this position until 1851, when he was elected to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania; of this court he was judge six years. In 1857, he became Chief Justice of Pennsylvania, his associates were Jeremiah S. Black, George W. Woodward, John C. Knox, and William Strong; forming a bench ever regarded by the bar of the country as of rare distinction. At the expiration of his term, in 1863, Judge Lowrie resumed legal practice for five years in Pittsburgh. In 1868, he removed to Philadelphia. In 1870, was elected president judge of Crawford county, and removed to Meadville, and there resided in the discharge of his official duties until the time of his death, October 14, 1876. Chief Justice Lowrie was one of Pennsylvania's most eminent jurists. The Princeton Review, vol. 2 in giving a review of the "Lowrie Opinions," states: "He is best known by his judicial opinions, Many of them contain very thorough and philosophical discussions of complicated judicial questions pervaded by a pure and decided tone of individual and social morality and order. Judge Lowrie was esteemed for his perfect fairness and love of justice, regarding the spirit of the law and not the letter as the law itself. As a philosophical writer, he contributed to several journals, monthly and quarterly. The following are among his published essays: Inductive and Deductive Politics, The Dissolution of Empires, The Natural Grounds of Civil Authority, Buckley's History of Civilization, etc." In manners and appearance, Judge Lowrie was a gentleman of the old school. From the tribute paid to his memory by Hon. H. C. Richmond, before the Bar of Crawford county, we make one extract: "We have known few men who possessed so great an extent the power of personal attraction. Of a fine presence and a pleasant countenance, his qualities of head and heart were such as not only to command respect, but to win and hold the affections. He was a learned lawyer, an erudite scholar, a devout Christian, and, what in his exalted position was, if possible of greater importance, an upright and impartial judge. In his judicial decisions he knew neither friend nor acquaintance, nor stranger, nor foe—if, indeed, he had a foe." Two sons survive him, Jas. A. Lowrie, an attorney of Denver, Colorado, and Rev. Samuel T. Lowrie, late Prof. of Exegesis and Literature in the Western Theological Seminary of Pittsburgh.

Major James A. Lowrie, eldest son of Judge W. H. Lowrie, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 25, 1833. Graduated July, 1851, from Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, and in December, 1854, was admitted to the bar in Pittsburgh. In 1861, he espoused the Union cause and served under Gen. Negley, with Major Patterson's column, in Maryland and Virginia. On the 7th of October, 1861, he was appointed Assistant Adjutant with rank of captain, and served on the staff of Brig. Gen'l Negley, until after the battle of Chamaunga. After the battle of Stone River he was promoted Major and Assistant Adj. Gen'l. At this time he obtained short leave of absence and was married in Pittsburgh, Nov. 24, 1863, to Miss Mary J. Park, of that place. He was then assigned to the staff of Brig. Gen'l Baird, in Maj. Gen'l Thomas' Army of the Cumberland, participating in all the engagements until the fall of Atlanta, Georgia. He then resigned and returned to his home, resuming his profession. In 1875, he removed with his family to Colorado.
Dr. James A. Lowrie, second son of Hon. M. B. and Jane Bailey Lowrie, born in Pittsburgh, Feb. 12, 1810, graduated from the Western University of that city, and at once began the study of medicine for which he had unusual gifts. Took his medical diploma at Philadelphia in 1831. In 1832 the Asiatic cholera reached New York. Desiring to be fully prepared to grapple with the disease, he went to New York and devoted himself to its study under the best physicians and in the hospitals. He was so enthusiastic as to overwork, when exhausted he contracted a violent cold. He was a man of powerful physique, and having always enjoyed perfect health was at first disposed to make light of it. He made a voyage to the West India Islands in January, 1833, for restoration, unavailing. He returned to Philadelphia, sunk rapidly and died May 1st, 1833.

John M. Lowrie, son of Hon. Mathew B. Lowrie, was born in the city of Pittsburgh, July 16, 1817, married in April, 1843, Miss Hetty Dunsonbury. Dr. Lowrie graduated with distinction from Lafayette College in the class of 1840, and afterwards pursued his theological studies at the Princeton Seminary. Oct. 18, 1843, he was ordained pastor of the church of Blairstown and Knewton, N. J., and afterwards officiated as pastor at Wellsville, O., and at Lancaster, O. In 1856, he was installed at Fort Wayne, Ind., and there remained until the close of his life.

Dr. Lowrie was a man of much more than ordinary natural gifts. His attainments in the classics and in mathematics, and his acquaintance with history, science and general literature, were extensive and accurate. He was especially familiar with poetry, both classical and English, and was himself the author of a number of hymns which have a high degree of poetic merit. He was also the author of several works of a historical and religious character, among which are "Esther and Her Times." "The Hebrew Lawgiver," &c.

Failing health compelled him, in 1866, to give up active work and seek recovery in a European tour. The relief derived, however, was but temporary, and after returning home a steady decline set in which resulted in death on the 26th of Sept., 1867. Three sons survive him, Rev. Matthew B. Lowrie, Rev. J. Gibson Lowrie and Harry C. Lowrie.

CYRUS B. CHILDs.

In response to a note from us Mr. Childs says his father was Cyrus Wentworth Childs, his grandfather was Cyrus Childs, and his great grandfather was Ebenezer Childs, and supposes the mention of these names will give us a clue to his line of ancestry. These names, however, do not suggest his line, and the name of Ebenezer is so often used in different branches it does not indicate the family to which he belongs. Mr. Cyrus B. Childs says:

"The earliest history of the family that I am in possession of, dates back to the early portion of the present century, when their residence was eighty or one hundred miles west of Boston, Mass. From thence I trace them to western New York, to Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, and on to the great American desert, now known as Nebraska. I can give biography of my father, grandfather, and many incidents of the later portion of my great grandfather's life."

We have been unable to obtain any further information from Mr. Childs, though several communications have been sent him. Mr. Childs is an attorney at law, a real estate, collection and insurance agent, notary public and general conveyancer, residing in Riverton, Franklin county, Neb.
HOLLISTER FAMILY.

Solomon Hollister was an early emigrant from Connecticut to South Ballston, N. Y., and was the father of several sons and daughters, all born in that town. The sons were men of marked characteristics, of robust constitutions, and of sturdy principles; and gave a healthy moral and religious tone to the community. These sons were Roswell, Ezra, Joshua and Solomon. There were also two daughters—perhaps more. One married a Mr. Miller, who was a lawyer; the other married a Mr. Waterman, a well-to-do farmer of Ballston. Roswell Hollister, the father of Mrs. Melissa Hollister Child, (see page 226,) was born November 5, 1782, and married 1805, Esther Guernsey, born October 31, 1787. Mrs. Hollister was of highly respectable parentage. She was a noble christian woman, whose heart and energies were ever employed in various good works. She was a kind and affectionate mother, but sensible and judicious in the treatment of her household. She was long a widow. Mr. Hollister died June 27, 1825, and Mrs. Hollister died November 19, 1865. They had eight children: i. Melissa, born October 7, 1807, married August 29, 1831, Elias Child. She died July 18, 1832, in Tompkins, Delaware county, N. Y., and was buried in South Ballston, her native place; she had one child, died soon. ii. Alfred, born August 19, 1809, married December 30, 1835, Eliza Raymond, of Ballston Centre—there is no record at hand of any children; he died September 12, 1842. iii. Arzela, born December 29, 1811, married October 2, 1835, James H. Spear, a hardware merchant of Ballston, Spa., N. Y.; he died some years since. Mrs. Spear lives in Goshen, Orange county, N. Y., where an only child and son, is engaged in the hardware trade. James Spear, the son, married November, 1867, Sarah Brown, daughter of Silas C. and Sarah Holbert Brown, of Orange county, N. Y. They have had four or five children, two only are living—Arzela and Nathan. iv. Zilphia, born May 5, 1814, a sweet child and lovely christian, died March 5, 1832. v. Roswell G., born April 23, 1816, went at an early day to Savannah, Georgia, and settled; he married June 1, 1842, Catharine Wood; he has been an active business man for more than thirty years, a man of determined purpose and manly courage; he has children, but we are not informed of their names and number. vi. Nathan, born September 25, 1818, married 1st, about 1845, or 1846, Miss Jane Thurston, of Duchess county, N. Y.; married 2d. March 2, 1852, Louisa Cornelia Brown, daughter of Silas C. and Sarah Holbert Brown. Mr. Hollister has been in active mercantile business for forty years or more, in Brooklyn, Elmira, Rochester and Utica, N. Y. In the last named place has been in an extensive book trade for twenty years or more, in which he still continues. By the first marriage he had two children: 1. Alfred born November 10, 1847, married September 9, 1871, E. Evadue Halisea. They have one child, Alfred Edwin, born April 19, 1879. 2. Kate, born August 6, 1849, married April 19, 1874, George Hippard of New York City; they have two children—a daughter and son. By second marriage he had seven children: 1. Emma, born Feb. 7, 1853, died in infancy. 2. Esther Guernsey, born January 30, 1855, died August 20, 1875. 3. Lewis Brown, born February 6, 1857. 4. Jasper Thurston, born April 29, 1859, died November 16, 1861. 5. Sarah Brown, born April 6, 1861. 6. Cora May, born May 8, 1863. 7. Nathan Roswell,
The following were received too late to place them under the head of Obituary Notices:

Mr. Benjamin G. Child, an old Bostonian, has just died in St. Louis, Mo., 1881. He came of revolutionary stock, his father having served and been disabled in the war of the Revolution. Born at Boston, December 19, 1767, the death of his father threw him at an early age into the whirlpool of the world to fight out his way by himself. The tendency of his mind being of a mechanical turn, he took up ship-building, inventing many valuable tools used in the exercise of his craft. When the war of 1812 broke out he joined a company commanded by his brother, Joseph Child, and made the campaign. Returning to Boston he resumed his ship-building. November 18, 1821, he married Eliza Treadwell Gray, of Boston, who died in St. Louis, June 26, 1866. Owing to the financial crisis in 1837, under the effect of the banks, he fell compelled to leave Boston, and the loved associations of his early home, for Cincinnati. From Cincinnati he went to St. Louis, in 1847, still following his profession of steamboat-building, etc. During the late war he returned East, and was for five years engaged in the Brooklyn and Boston navy-yards. Since then he has been a constant resident of St. Louis, his three daughters all being teachers in the public schools. Mr. Child was a thorough Republican, a devoted Swedenborgian, and liberal in all his views. But what endeared him most to those who knew him best was his thorough kindness and charity toward all men. He occasionally contributed to the Commonwealth. Indeed, he had begun, as we are informed, a series of articles detailing his early reminiscences of Boston. Prof. Francis J. Child, of Harvard, is his nephew.—Boston Commonwealth.

Bessie Child, born March 5, 1879, died March 17 or 18, 1881. (See page 409, No. 3174.)

WILLIAM HENRY CHILD.

The following epitome of a family of the name should have come in on page 768, as this family are probably descendants of Cephas and Percilla Naylor Child of Plumstead, Bucks County, Pa. By some oversight it failed to be placed in its natural position. The account is furnished by one of its members, Mr. George W. Child of St. Louis, Mo.

He says: "My grandfather was William Henry Child. He moved from Annapolis, Md., to a large farm near the Mogathry river. He was so accommodating as to endorse for most any friend, and had to pay all notes he endorsed, which amounted to thousands of dollars. Consequently he was broken up. His wife was a Miss Tropp.

Their children were: Elizabeth, Martha Ann, Sarah, William Henry, Jun., and Zachariah; Zachariah Child was my father, and was the youngest and is the only survivor of the family; the others died years ago. William Henry Jun., and my father were the only ones that married. My mother was a Fosterfield. The children of Zachariah and — Fosterfield Child were three daughters and seven sons: Martha Ann, Elizabeth Frances, Mary Ann, William Henry, William Henry 2nd, Zachariah, Jun., Samuel Garlin, James Thomas, Charles Wesley, and George W. Child the writer. Of the children the daughters are married and are still living. Of the sons none are living except James Thomas, and Charles Wesley, both married, and myself unmarried. My grandfather had a brother Benjamin Child, who lived in Western Virginia. He had several sons and daughters, and owned the White Sulphur Springs. There are a great many of our name in that vicinity. My father's family were all born in the city of Baltimore, and reared there; my father owning a considerable property in that city."

We regret the absence of all dates in this history, which are quite essential in a complete and satisfactory Genealogical record, and that we could obtain no fuller account of the earlier ancestors. We have written, addressing the descendants of Benjamin Child, but failed to obtain any reply; the letter being returned to us from the Dead Letter Office at Washington, D. C.
FACTS OF INTEREST.

The following statistics of those of the name and descent in the various professions and pursuits is, we fear, incomplete, as in many instances we have not ascertained these particulars, though always aiming to do so. We can but presume for example the number of graduates from the various collegiate institutions to be much larger than the number we record, yet we know with certainty only of this number. The enumeration does not include any who are only allied by marriage.

The soldiers are found scattered through the lines. Serving in the early French and Indian Wars; the Revolutionary struggle; the later contest with Great Britain, called the War of 1812; the Mexican War; and the War of the Rebellion.

The colleges represented are:

Dartmouth, Brown, Harvard, Hamilton, Miami, Middlebury, Oberlin, Union, Yale, Williams.
Vanderbilt University, Western University, University of New York.

The Ohio, Vermont and New Hampshire Medical Schools.

The Auburn, Yale, Cambridge, Oberlin, Union, La ne,
And Andover Theological Seminaries.

The Harvard and Columbia Law Schools.

It may be of interest to the curious to preserve the following fact related of one of the name, by Sir Travers Twiss, in the meeting of the International Law Congress in London, August 14, 1879. He said: "The first Promissory Note payable to bearer, issued in England, was issued by Sir Francis Child, from the vicinity of Temple Bar, 150 years ago, who three years afterwards became Lord Mayor of London."
INDEX.—CHILD.

The names of minors now living, and the names of those who died young, are not given in the Index; but will be found with the record of their parents. The records of females married will be found under the name of the husband.

born April 23, 1868. vii. Esther, born September 28, 1824, died unmarried, October 30, 1849, in South Ballston, N. Y., a bright, intelligent and beautiful girl, as lovely in disposition and Christian character as she was beautiful in person; tenderly loved in the family circle; a girl of warm affections, possessing a sympathetic nature, fond of expressing itself to relieve human suffering, and add to the sum of human happiness. viii. Ezra, the youngest, born December 23, 1823, was a prompt and active lad, left his maternal home in early youth, and now for many years has not been traced.

THORP FAMILY, BUTTERNUTS, N. Y.

In connection with a brief notice of Mrs. Sylvina Thorp Child, page 226, I should not feel that I was doing justice to her memory did I not make more than a passing allusion to her parentage and family connection. Her father, Edward Thorp, Esq., was a wealthy farmer in the town of Butternuts, Otsego county, N. Y. He was born in the town of Greenwich, Ct., in 1775. At sixteen years of age he removed with his parents to Butternuts, where his long and active life was spent, dying 1869, at the age of ninety-three years. He was a man of robust constitution, of remarkable physical endurance, and not less remarkable for his intellectual vigor and love of literature. When a severe days' labor on the farm had been closed, the short hours of the night often found him absorbed in some interesting book or periodical, and in one instance a whole night was thus unconsciously spent. He was well informed upon all the current topics of the day, much beyond the average man of the period, and quite at home among the old British authors. Endowed with a retentive memory, the reading of his younger days was fresh in his mind to the latest period of his life. At ninety years of age he has been heard to repeat passages from "Watts' Lyrics," which he had committed to memory at nine years of age, with the emphasis and enthusiasm of youth. He retained his mental vigor, scarcely impaired, to the time of his death; memory reverting only with less distinctness to more recent events.

In politics he was a Federalist, a Whig, and a Republican, successively, as one form was adopted for another. A purer and more unselfish patriot could not be found. Commencing with the election of President John Adams, in 1797, when his first vote was cast, he never failed to vote at a presidential election up to the time of his death, covering a period of seventy-two years, and extending through the administrations of seventeen Presidents, including the accidental administrations of John Tyler, Millard Fillmore and Andrew Johnson. Mr. Thorp was a man of unswerving integrity, instinctively a gentleman in his intercourse with his neighbors and fellow townspeople. He despised dishonesty, trickery and vulgarity in every possible form; transparent in his own character, he could not endure the absence of frankness in others. He was a man of broad and liberal views on all public questions, yet a man of pronounced opinions. He readily comprehended the public necessities, and was an earnest advocate for all enterprises of public benefit. He was efficient in advancing the cause of general education, as might be expected of a man of his degree of enlightenment. He was a living chronology of all remarkable events connected with the history of the country, and was an authority from which few would venture to take an appeal. He was a man of great tenacity of purpose, which, accompanied by sound judgment, rendered him one of the valuable and efficient citizens of the town.

Mr. Thorp was early married to Miss Sylvina Tremain, a lady of much personal worth, possessing qualities of heart and head which she efficiently developed in the circle of her home, and was an esteemed member of society. She died in 1844. They had eight children, all of whom lived to settle in life.

i. The eldest, Charles A. Thorp, born in 1796, was graduated at Hamilton College, in Clinton, N.Y., under President Backus. Studied law and settled in Norwich, Chenango county, N.Y., where most of his professional life was spent. He married, in 1829, Susan Avery of Oxford, Chenango county, N.Y. They had four children, all daughters. The eldest, Sarah Thorp, married Mr. William Thomas, an intelligent and active business man; now settled in the State of Arkansas, an extensive land owner. Elizabeth Thorp, the second daughter married Hon. Horace G. Prindle, of Norwich, N.Y., a prominent and successful lawyer, who for many years held the office of County Judge of Chenango county, N.Y. The third daughter, Mary Thorp, is unmarried, and lives with her father in Norwich, N.Y. The youngest daughter died young. Charles A. Thorp, Esq., when in his prime, held a high position as a lawyer at the bar of Chenango county, N.Y. The thoroughness with which he prepared his cases for court, with the power of language he displayed in arguing them, established a reputation which secured him a large patronage. Like his father, he possessed great tenacity of purpose, and seldom failed to accomplish his ends. In politics, his affiliations were with the old Whig party, and later with the Republican. His conversational powers were unusual, and he seldom failed to interest the listener. Often his topic made him forgetful of himself. We can relate an amusing anecdote without giving offence. On return from New York City, on one occasion, with several of his townsmen, to their homes, while entertaining them in conversation, he folded and twisted, and picked into atoms his railroad ticket, which he held in his hand. When the conductor called for tickets, his ticket was missing. He began a thorough search of his pockets, and of the seat, and of the floor, but no ticket could be found, till the remnants of paper on the car floor, when put together, revealed the mystery. The incident recalled the story of Sir Isaac Newton's being discovered, boiling his watch while holding in his hand the egg which he supposed was in the vessel. Mr. Thorp is spending the evening of his life in Norwich, N.Y.

ii. The second child and son of Edward and Sylvina Tremain Thorp was Lewis Edward, born in 1798. He married, in 1827, Margaret Mack. He was a farmer and lived in Butternuts. He possessed excellent native abilities and had a fair education. At sixteen years of age he had become a competent surveyor, and was often employed in surveying large tracts in and about Otsego county. He was a man of integrity and an earnest supporter of good society, and an esteemed citizen. He was a man of keen sensibilities and honorable instincts, of independent opinions, but courteous and urbane. He died in 1848, leaving no children. Mrs. Thorp died some years later.
iii. The third child and eldest daughter of Edward and Sylvina Tremain Thorp was Abigail P. Thorp, born in 1800. She married Mr. James Boyd, a merchant in the town of Laurens, Otsego county, N.Y., where he died after several years of a successful business. Mr. Boyd belonged to a highly respected family. An elder brother settled in the city of Monroe, Mich., a merchant. A prosperous business brought him handsome accumulations. He died some years since, leaving several children. One, William Boyd, a merchant who succeeded his father in the business, as well as in the eldership of the Presbyterian church in Monroe. Another son, Rev. Erasmus J. Boyd, has long been at the head of a female institute in Monroe, Mich., a very efficient educator. Mr. and Mrs. James Boyd had two children. Edward and Christina, both died in youth. Mrs. Boyd is a lady much esteemed in the circle of her acquaintance, among whom she has spent a long and pleasant life. Her family passing away from her many years ago, her intellectual tastes and her literary resources have enabled her to spend a long life with less of a sense of loneliness than usually falls to the lot of those in like position. She is well posted in the history of the country, and she inherits a characteristic prominent in the family, independence in her opinions.

iv. The fourth child and second daughter of Edward and Sylvina Tremain Thorp is Caroline Matilda, born in 1804, married in 1827, Dea. Elias Foote of Brighton, N.Y., and later at Batavia, Genesee county, N.Y. Mr. Foote was a woolen manufacturer; the larger portion of his life was spent in Batavia, during which time he was an active business man and a prominent member and officer in the Presbyterian church. He was a native of Stockbridge, Mass., born May 15, 1799, and died in Batavia, Jan. 29, 1875. Mrs. Foote is a fair representative of the general characteristics, prominent in the Thorp family; with positive opinions and persistency of purpose she maintains a wise independence in the affairs of life. Early consecrating herself to the service of her Divine Master, her life has been one of true and sincere devotion to the christian faith. Mrs. Foote resides in Batavia. There were six children of this marriage: 1. Elizabeth, born Aug. 23, 1830, married May 6, 1852, Henry S. Worthington of Lenox, Mass.; he died Jan. 23, 1853; they had one child, Libbie, she died at nearly three years of age. 2. Edward, born Jan. 31, 1833, married in 1857, Helen Case of Honeoye Falls; he died Nov. 28, 1867; she died Aug. 1876. They had two children, Carrie, who died Nov. 1861, aged three years; Renee, who died in 1867, aged one year. 3. Henry, born June 28, 1834, died April 14, 1855. 4. George, born March 6, 1836, died young. 5. Fannie, born Nov. 23, 1839, married in 1860, Richard Wells a physician: they reside in Mes- senla, Montana, between the Rocky and Bitter Root Mountains. Their children are, Richard, aged 14; Ernest Custer, aged 3; Bruce. aged 1 year. 6. Jennie, born Aug. 23, 1846, married in 1869, James Rogers, a physician: they live in Sedalia, Mo.

v. The fifth child of Edward and Sylvina Tremain Thorp was William, born in 1806; he was married, in 1846, to Christina Bear. Mr. Thorp was up to the average man in point of capacity and intelligence; after marrying he settled in Western Pennsylvania as a lumberman and farmer; he died in 1877. Mrs. Thorp died earlier. They left one or two children: whether they are alive, we are not informed.
vi. Sylvina, (see page 226,) the sixth child and third daughter of Edward and Sylvina Tremain Thorp, was born in 1809, and died October 5, 1865, in the City of New York. In addition to the brief notice on page 226, it will not be out of place to give here a further sketch of her life. She early developed bright intellectual faculties, and an unusual fondness for books, and was often found reading with eagerness, books beyond the comprehension of most children of her years. Her early school discipline was under the instruction of Rev. Levi Collins, a thorough scholar and disciplinarian, and principal of Gilbertsville Academy, in the town of Butternuts. Her graduation later, after the completion of the usual prescribed course of studies, was from the Oxford, N. Y., Academy. Her attainments for the period were considered of high order, and subsequently proved as substantial as finished scholarship of the present day. Her conversational powers were so noticeable a gift as to elicit frequent compliments from interested listeners. An intelligent gentleman on one occasion having listened to some topic under discussion, remarked that her utterances needed no revision for the press, her language was so well chosen, so luminous and forcible. Her manners were dignified and courteous. She was never charged with violating the proprieties of life in language or manners. While independent in her opinions, they were modestly expressed. In the domestic relations, she was amiable, judicious and warmly sympathetic. Intelligently and devoutly christian in feeling and sentiment, she was loved for her sincerity and consistency of life. Of her four children three preceded her in death. The youngest, a son, survives her, inheriting not a few of his mother’s characteristics. At the age of fifteen he entered the office of the Rochester, N. Y., Gas Light Company as clerk, under Superintendent George W. Parsons, Esq. Two years thereafter, at the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, 1861, he was advanced to the Chief Clerkship, made vacant by the enlistment of the superintendent’s son, Capt. Theron Parsons, in the Union Army. This position he held for three years, till the close of the war, when Capt. T. Parsons returned to his former post, and young Child went to New York City and entered the publishing house of Ivison, Phinney & Co., now Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., where he still remains. While connected with the Gas Light Office, he was quite popular with the company, superintendent and employees, and the superintendent declared his cash account for the three years that the funds were passing through his hands, “was never a cent out of the way” though eighty or ninety thousand dollars a year were the receipts and disbursements. On his leaving the office the employees (fifty in number), testified their esteem for him in the presentation of a valuable gold watch chain.

vii. Hannah was the seventh child and youngest daughter of Edward and Sylvina Tremain Thorp. She was born in 1814, and married in 1857, Mr. William D. Babcock of Butternuts, N. Y. Mrs. Babcock was a person of great, good sense, well informed, of a most sweet and lovely disposition, kind and sympathising, withal possessing the independence of character, peculiar to the Thorp family. She died in calm, peaceful, christian hope, in 1877, leaving no children.

viii. The eighth and youngest child of Edward and Sylvina Tremain Thorp, is the Hon. Henry Thorp, born in 1816, and married in 1840, Mary H. Buckley, daughter of the late John Buckley, Esq., of Unadilla, N. Y., and later of Freeport, Ill. Mr. Thorp is the Benjamin of the family, and occupies the homestead; a fair representative in hospitalities and social amenities of an honored father. His pleasantry and good humor have made him a favorite in his family circle; while native good sense and sound judgment have rendered him a reliable and safe counsellor. Of generous impulses and liberal views, his interest in public affairs has been a prominent feature in his activities, and by the suffrages of his fellow townsmen, has served a term as their representative in the State Legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Thorp have reared a family of eight children: i. M. Augusta, who married Charles Child. (See page 229.) ii. John B., born Sept. 20, 1843; settled in Lansing, Iowa, as a merchant; married July, 1872, Eva Spenser of Lansing, Iowa, niece of Rev. Dr. Spenser, late of Brooklyn, N.Y. They have two children—1. Minnie M., born May, 1873; 2. Charles Henry, born May, 1875. iii. Edward, twin with John, born Sept. 20, 1843, died Aug. 1860. iv. James Henry, born Aug. 13, 1845, married May, 1869, Minnie Hurd, daughter of David Hurd, Esq., an extensive business man of Butternuts, N.Y. Mr. Thorp is at the homestead, a thorough farmer and business man; a citizen much esteemed for his probity and executive ability. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Thorp have three children—1. Benjamin Hurd, born Nov. 7, 1870; 2. Mary Helen, born Aug. 10, 1872; 3. James Lewis, born Feb. 11, 1879. v. Eliza, born April 26, 1847, married Oct. 1867, James A. Mead, a physician, in Chicago, Ill. They have two children—1. Allen Henry, born Mch. 17, 1870; 2. Florence, born Sept. 1877. vi. Lewis Edward, born April 6, 1849, is a physician and surgeon, settled, but unmarried, in Gilbertsville, in the town of Butternuts, N.Y., and in a successful and lucrative practice. vii. Julia Christena, born Dec. 29, 1851. viii. William, born Feb. 11, 1854; is a lawyer, settled in Sidney, Delaware county, N.Y.

Cleaveland Family.

The Cleaveland family is of mixed blood, French and Anglo-Saxon. A tradition has been found in the family that the Norman name was DeCliffeland, but of this we have no certain data. In Great Britain the family were residents of Durham county, one of the most northern counties of England. The emigrant ancestor was "Moyses" Cleaveland who married in England, in 1648, Ann —, and removed soon after from Ipswich, Suffolk county to America, settling in that part of Massachusetts now known as Winchester, Middlesex county; a citizen esteemed for his probity and sterling mental qualities. One of the ancient slabs of dark colored stone marks his grave. "Moyses" reared a large family of sons and several daughters. His third son, Samuel Cleaveland, removed to Canterbury, Ct., and was himself the head of a numerous family of talent and worth; one of his sons, Col. Aaron Cleaveland, was a man of stalwart frame, and great executive ability. He was prominent in the affairs of the colony, and in the military operations against the Indians and French. Capt. Aaron Cleaveland, eldest son of Col. Aaron, was a "member of the State Legislature; a man of wit, humor and talent." Several of his sons were clergymen. From this line, by their mother, are descended Rev. S. Hanson Coxe, D. D., and Bishop A. Cleaveland Coxe, D. D.
Josiah Cleaveland, the eighth child of "Moyses" Cleaveland, also settled in Canterbury, Ct., in 1694, when it is said there was but one English family in the town. In 1699, he purchased 176 acres of land from Owancee, "then being of Peagscomneke." Josiah Cleaveland, Jr., married Abigail Payne, and two of his sons, Ebenezer and John, became clergymen of the Congregationalist denomination, in Massachusetts, somewhat distinguished for the position they held in a religious movement whose followers were termed New Lights. Rev. John Cleaveland preached for a time in Boston, declining a settlement, he became a pastor in "Chebacco," now Essex, Mass.; he was a man of unusual polemic abilities: he was a chaplain in the Revolutionary war, and his camp-chest and powder-horn are now in the possession of his descendants, as well as his study chair, and the office chair of his son, Parker Cleaveland, M. D. It may not be unsuitable to mention here, that to Mrs. S. P. Cleaveland Child belongs a chair given her by her father, which was brought by one of her French ancestors in 1680, from a Waldensian home; its age is pronounced by connoisseurs of the antique to be from five to six hundred years, the form being the index. Two sons of the Rev. John Cleaveland were physicians, Nehemiah and Parker, and resided in Essex county, Mass.; they were men of great stature, and with well proportioned forms. Dr. Nehemiah Cleaveland had four sons, one Rev. Elisha Cleaveland, D. D., a clergyman in New Haven, Ct., for some years; another, John Cleaveland, was a lawyer, a member of the Bar in New York City.

Parker Cleaveland, M. D., was a man of the genuine Puritan stamp, and as truly and surely administered to the souls as the bodies of his patients. He married for his second wife his cousin, Abigail Cleaveland, daughter of Aaron Cleaveland of Canterbury, Ct., and a sister of Gen. Moses Cleaveland, who purchased from the Indians the site of the city of Cleaveland, to which he gave his own name. The eldest son of Dr. P. Cleaveland was Parker Cleaveland, a graduate of Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.; he was one of the first professors in Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me.; a man of superior talents and scholarship, holding the Chair of Chemistry and Mineralogy; and member of several foreign scientific societies. The second son was the Rev. John Payne Cleaveland, D. D., a graduate of Bowdoin College, of whom other record is found on pages 226, 227.

He married for his first wife, Miss Susan Hurd Dole, daughter of Moses and Sarah Thurston Dole. Mr. Dole was of a most sunny disposition, never known to find fault however great the provocation. A man of the keenest wit, quick at repartee, but without satire or sarcasm. His contact with men was sure to allay asperity, and awaken pleasure, yet a man of decided characteristics. There were several children of this marriage, all of whom were naturally brilliant and talented. The only son was educated for a clergyman, and has filled a long and useful ministry in the Congregational Church. Mrs. Cleaveland was a person of rare personal beauty, a lady of brilliant intellect, superior culture. She was a pupil of Professor Emerson, an eminent teacher of his times. She was a classmate and room-mate of Mary Lyon, the founder of Mt. Holyoke Seminary, and attained an excellent scholarship. Her gentleness of disposition and refinement of manner rendered her attractive, and gave her great influence in the circle of her acquaintance. To these natural characteristics were added sincere piety and large Christian sympathy. From this marriage were two children, daughters, the youngest, Caroline Worcester, a most lovely and precocious child, died at ten and a half years of age, in Ann Arbor, Washtenaw county, Mich. The elder daughter, Susan Parker, the wife of the publisher of this work, has been highly educated, and ranks among the cultured, refined and intelligent members of society. The traces of her intellectual ability will be found on the pages of this volume, without the promise of which the laborious and perplexing task of preparing this Genealogy would not have been undertaken. Dr. Cleaveland's second wife was Miss Julia Chamberlain, daughter of Capt. Samuel and Mary Tilton Chamberlain of Exeter, N. H. Captain Chamberlain was for many years commander of a merchant vessel, engaged in the carrying trade between this and foreign countries. Mrs. Julia C. Cleaveland is a lady of commanding presence, of dignified manners and unusually qualified to adorn society: a lady of positive religious character and much devoted to benevolent work.

Almost the entire line is found in the medical, legal or clerical professions. Some of the families, both in England and America, have succumbed to the mania for abridging words, and omit the a in writing the name, though not to its improvement.

CALHOUN FAMILY.

The Calhoun family, to which Mrs. Charles Henry Childs belongs, has a prominence in the civil and religious history of the country, the brief sketch of which cannot fail to interest and gratify the friends and descendants of this alliance.

The original name was Coquhoun, then Colquhoun, which latter form is still retained by some of the descendants, and by others it is changed to Calhoun. The family is of Scotch extraction. The early ancestor, whose history is traced, is Andrew Calhoun, born March 27, 1764, in Parish Ray, Douegal county, Ireland. His parents were natives of Ayre county, Scotland—the family were probably among the early emigrants who were transplanted from Scotland under government arrangements for the benefit of Ireland's untutored population. We have not the date of his emigration to this country. He is known as a man of influence and position in this country; was settled in Boston, Mass., and was an officer in the Park Street church for many years. He had seven sons, born in Boston, Mass.: 1. Andrew Calhoun, the eldest, was much in public life—canal commissioner in the State of New York, editor, at one time clerk of the Senate of New York, and served a while in the custom house in New York. 2. Wm. B. Calhoun was a lawyer and settled in Springfield, Mass., and for a long time represented the Springfield district in Congress, and filled many offices of trust in his native State. 3. Rev. Simeon Calhoun, D. D., was one of the oldest and ablest missionaries in the Holy Land; he died in Buffalo, N. Y., a few years since, greatly lamented by the christian public. After his death, his widow returned to the missionary field. A son, after qualifying himself in both medicine and theology, has succeeded his father in missionary work in the Holy Land. 4. John Calhoun, a lawyer, has been much in political life, and under appointment by Congress as surveyor general of Kansas. 5. Charles Calhoun, a lawyer, and clerk of Massachusetts State Senate. 6. Henry Calhoun, the father of Mrs. Charles H. Childs, was a man of large stature (I think all the sons were above medium size), of commanding presence, affable and courteous in manners and highly esteemed for his integrity and efficiency as a public officer. The New York Tribune said at the time of his decease: "Henry Calhoun was first a valued partner in a very prominent jobbing house in New York city—afterwards received the appointment of deputy collector of this port under Fillmore, continued for many years with distinguished ability and faithfulness, and died in the public service." He died May 7, 1867. 7. James Calhoun, the youngest of the seven sons, a lawyer, was at one time a law partner of President Abraham Lincoln—an alliance of which one might be proud. Hon. John C. Calhoun, the great southern statesman, was a cousin of Andrew Calhoun.

APPENDIX III.

MARRIAGES.

Page 232, No. 1,395.—Rev. Frank S. Child was married Oct. 21, 1880, in the Congregational church of "Sound Beach," in the town of Greenwich, Ct., by Rev. Samuel Scovil of Stamford, Ct., to Miss Lizzie J. Lilly, only daughter of the late General John and Hattie A. Lilly, of Lafayette, Ind. Mrs. Child was born in Lafayette in 1839; reared in easy circumstances, and enjoyed the advantages of thorough education in classical schools at home, and the wider field of travel abroad.

2000 A.M. I am glad to see you in better health.

The Governor of the United States is the President of the United States. I am not sure if the amount of his salary is the same as the dollar. I am not sure what you need. If you are

Wellington, Betsey 500
Jane 501

Luther 505
Henry 717
As one of the seven children I was favored with the tender care of Ethel Fossett, who I never cease to thank. As the other six children have passed away,

I am a daughter of Sarah Green Child Davenport.
Married 2d, Rebecca Mansell, niece of Seth & Sarah Mansell, May 15, 1784.
